INTRODUCTION

Goals and Purpose of this Study

The purpose of this study is to compile a complete list of the churches of the Congregational Way in New England from the arrival of the Pilgrims in 1620 down to the ecumenical mergers of the present century.

The reasons for this study are varied. One is merely the fact that no real attempt has been made to complete such a survey for all of New England since the early 19th Century. Since then the annual yearbook reports have been considered an appendage to those lists.

However, the passage of nearly a third of the history of Congregationalism on this soil since their completion seemed to necessitate a new accounting. This is particularly necessary in view of the recent disputes within the family over the so-called merger controversy and the division of the family into several groups.

But the author hopes to see other goals realized as well.

The statistical listings provided by the yearbooks over 160 years have never been fully put to use. By carefully identifying the community and county of each church I envision real possibilities in historical studies of the sociology of religion by combining the church membership statistics in the yearbooks, the data here and the United States Census. With modern computer techniques we are open to study things about ourselves that we have never had the opportunity to explore so extensively.

This author admits to a real hope that someone will do this statistical work. We need to know how the ways of the world impact the Church. But it is my sincere belief that the statistical studies will reveal some deep mystery, some statistically unaccountable influence, and then, perhaps, we will be closer to the Holy Spirit.

Other possible uses of this work are as a framework for inventories of church records for geneological and similar studies; local history studies of counties and towns in New England; ethnic histories as they relate to Anglo Saxon Congregationalism; and studies in ecumenism as they relate to both federations and interdenominational local church unions as well as to the Twentieth Century church unions of Congregationalism. Eventually we would expect that these lists would become the outline for any future inventories of local church records. They could also be used to survey whether studies utilizing local church records were drawn from truly representative ethnic, geographic or social strata. The bibliographic data presented here by pointing to where data on each local congregation or group of congregations can be found, should facilitate the eventual compilation of a complete ministerial list for the churches of New England and the foundation of a complete catalogue of ministerial biography.

The focus of this study is the group of congregations founded by the English Separatist and Puritan peoples who migrated to early New England commonly called "Congregational Churches."

It shall be noted that in early usage congregational was always an adjective while the true and common name of the individual churches was consistently "Church of Christ" (following Calvin's congregation in Geneva, "The Church of Jesus Christ Reformed according to the Word of God"). The use of the word congregational as the name of a church came into use in the 19th Century when ecclesiastical societies and later the churches themselves were forced to incorporate with individual names that would protect their property for the particular religious community's views in which they had arisen.

To proceed, therefore, to make a list of Congregational churches, we must define what we mean by congregational and by church. For the purpose of this study congregational describes the family of individual congregations (local churches) growing out of the Separatist and Puritan immigration to New England.

In that sense a body is not "Congregational" simply because it uses the word. For instance the Evangelical Congregational Church, a denomination headquartered in Pennsylvania and tracing its history to German pietistic Methodism would not be included in this study. On the other hand, a local congregation called the Church of Christ which never used the word congregational in its title may be by all sources considered a part of this fellowship.

Generally the policy of inclusion has been one of a group consciousness. The Cambridge Platform provided for mutual recognition of churches through the right hand of fellowship (XV, 3). Those congregations recognized by the family as part of the family are part of the family.

Specifically this breaks down into two historical periods. During the colonial period this family was the recognized faith established by law in most of New England. Those congregations which were established were part of this family.

While the Cambridge Platform provided for recognition or disfellowshipping of churches on theological or moral grounds, in practice the legal approval of the establishment overruled many a council or association.

In non-establishment areas we cite the congregations recognized by and in fellowship with the established churches.

A separate denominational family called the Strict or Separate Congregationalists which arose in the 1740's at least partly in opposition to the church establishment are also included in this study.

After the American Revolution the various New England states relinquished the established order. Partly in preparation for this eventuality the congregations in the various states formed and strengthened associations, consociations, general associations, conventions and conferences which served to continue the family and to publish and recognize the churches under their mutual care.

Thus in the early days a church was either (a) established by law; (b) in a non-establishment area but in fellowship (through vicinage councils, etc.) with the established churches; (c) part of the strict congregational movement. In the latter years a church was part of some association or similar body. Other congregations, despite their name, must be considered independent or disfellowshipped.

These definitions, however, strain in two areas: in relation to Presbyterian and Unitarian churches. We have discussed both of these problems below. But for thoroughness we have included all Presbyterian congregations formed through 1837, all New School Presbyterian congregations formed through 1852 and all Unitarian congregations formed through 1850.

This author has also consistently acknowledged all entries made by other scholars in this area even if the entry does not fit our definition. Where there are definitional questions they are discussed at the entry.

As to the definitions of a church, it flows from the above. This family of Christians in the Cambridge Platform of 1648 defined a particular church thusly:

"Particular churches cannot be distinguished one from another but by their formes." (IV,2)

"This form is the Visible Covenant, Agreement, or consent whereby they give up themselves unto the Lord, to the observing of the ordinances of Christ together in the same society, which is usually called the Church-Covenant." (IV,3)

However, as the Synod recognized, and both the establishment and the associated churches allowed in later years, a church also exists where "The substance of it [Voluntary Agreement, Consent or Covenant] is kept, where there is a real Agreement & Consent, of a company of faithful persons to meet constantly together in one Congregation, for the publick worship of God, & their mutuall edification: which real agreement & consent, they doe express by their constant practise in comming together for the publick worship of God, & by their religious subjection to the ordinances of God there," which could be done "sometimes by silent consent, without any writing." (IV,4)

PREFACE

The author is grateful for the help of a myriad of archives and libraries which made this work possible; in particular my thanks goes to the Congregational Library, Boston, Ma.; the office of the Secretary of the United Church of Christ, New York, N.Y.; the Presbyterian Historical Society, Philadelphia, Pa.; the Evangelical and Reformed Historical Society, Lancaster, Pa.; the Andover Newton Theological School Library, Newton Centre, Ma.; the Harvard Divinity School Library, Cambridge, Ma.; the Marietta College Library, Marietta, Oh.; the Connecticut State Library, Hartford, Ct.; the New York State Library, Albany, N.Y..

My thanks is expressed also for the support of the George and Gertrude Frederickson Foundation, the Congregational Christian Historical Society, and the First Congregational Church (United Church of Christ) of Andover, Connecticut whose generous contributions and support helped to make the publication of this work possible.

My personal thanks to many colleagues whose help, comments, typing and other aid has been essential to this work. In particular my thanks to Dr. Harold F. Worthley, Mr. Russell E. Hall, Dr. Kenneth Cameron, the Rev. Lois F. Rose, and Mrs. Marilyn Lebel for their contributions.

Naturally in a study of this magnitude some errors are bound to slip in. The author requests that any corrections be sent to him for use in future editions. Time will also cause changes which you may wish to note in your copy.

The author intends to continue this study with similar publications covering other parts of the country and other branches of the United Church of Christ. A study of Congregational interchurch bodies such as Associations and Conferences is also contemplated. Those desiring information on these issues are also encouraged to write.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE NEW ENGLAND COLONIES AND STATES

The churches of this fellowship early became the established church in much of early New England. It is necessary to trace the development of the colonies themselves, therefore, to understand the development of the church communities they supported. The fellowship of churches which eventually became known as "Congregational" stems from the established churches of several independent single town colonies and the larger colonies of Massachusetts Bay (including Maine), New Plymouth, Connecticut, New Haven, Martha's Vineyard, and New Hampshire.

It is important also to note the geographic limits of each of these colonies, for as they changed, so the church condition changed in various communities. Land outside the current limits of the six New England states, which at one time was part of these colonies is noted in this discussion, but churches in those areas are excluded from the main lists.

The movement of Separatist and Puritan peoples to new England grew out of the persecutions and conflicts under the Stuart Kings of England, James I (1603-1625) and Charles I (1625-1649).

The first settlements were made through the Virginia Company of Plymouth, which was chartered in 1606 and granted coastal lands between the 38th and 45th parallels. It was reorganized under a new charter in 1620, being given lands between the 40th and 48th parallels sea to sea. It operated under the Plymouth Council of New England until it surrendered its charter in 1635. From this group came the original Massachusetts Bay, Plymouth, Warwick, Lygonia, Gorges and Mason grants. This group dreamed of a unified, and more than likely Anglican New England, but its dreams were not to be realized.

Once the great Puritan immigration began, independent Puritan settlements were made in many places beyond the original grants. A scattered number of Anglican and secular trading communities were also established usually under the Council. After the demise of the Council, the King attempted to unify New England under Gorges in 1637 but was soon distracted by the English Civil War. In the quest for leadership of the area, however, the Anglicans were simply swamped out by the size of the Puritan immigration. The War and the resultant Puritan ascendancy (1649-1660) let most of the scattered new Puritan communities get a foothold before clear organized regional colonies emerged.

(NEW) PLYMOUTH COLONY - Every school child knows the story of the Pilgrims coming to Plymouth in 1620. They were originally given permission to settle by the Virginia Company of London, but they settled outside its area of control. They organized themselves as a body politic under the Mayflower Compact of 1620. They received patents from the Council of New England in 1621 as a company and 1630, the latter chartering them as a colony. Its basic lands were the mainland between Plymouth and Narragansett Bays. This area now includes the Massachusetts counties of Barnstable, Bristol, and Plymouth (excluding the towns of Hingham and Hull), and Rhode Island east of Narragansett Bay and the Blackstone River. Its boundary with Massachusetts was settled in 1640. It also had title to a section of present-day Maine on the Kennebec River. It lost these lands to Massachusetts in 1652-1653. It also had claim to Martha's Vineyard, Nantucket, Long Island and related islands, which the King required it to give to the Earl of Stirling in 1635-1636.

MASSACHUSETTS BAY COMPANY - Some secular settlements were made here before authority to settle was given to the Massachusetts Bay Company by the Council of New England in 1628. The Company gained its own corporate charter from the King in 1629, thereby setting it somewhat free of the Council. Its officers were allowed to take the corporate offices to America, where the Company became virtually an independent entity related to the church because franchise was limited to church members. The royal charter gave the colony lands between three miles south of the Charles River and three miles north of the Merrimack River sea to sea, thus overlapping some of the Plymouth and much of the Mason and Gorges grants. As the only colony in New England before 1662 with a royal charter, and the most populous colony by far, it clearly dominated the region. Massachusetts considered itself an independent commonwealth 1649-1660.

OTHER EARLY PURITAN SETTLEMENTS:

CONNECTICUT: A group of Puritans began settlement of the Connecticut River in the towns of Hartford, Windsor, and Wethersfield in 1635. They organized themselves as Connecticut under the Fundamental Orders in 1639. For a while they included Springfield in what is now Massachusetts (1639-c.1641). A patent known as the Warwick Patent had been given for this area in 1632. The patent holders had established a military settlement at Saybrook. This patent was purchased by the colony in 1644 thus giving it a claim to its land. A boundary dispute with the Dutch New Netherland colony to the west was settled in 1650 by the United Colonies. This colony expanded to include settlements on the Thames River and to the west of the Housatonic River along the coast of Long Island Sound, and four towns on Long Island (Brookhaven, Easthampton, Huntington, and Southampton) in present-day New York which were added between 1644 and 1660. Many of these towns, both in present-day Connecticut and New York, began as independent settlements and were later joined to the colony.

NEW HAVEN COLONY: Another strongly religious colony like Massachusetts was the New Haven Colony begun in 1638. The New Haven Colony was organized to include more than one town in 1643. In addition to New Haven itself, the colony received under its administration independent colonies in nearby Guilford and Milford, and in Southold and Oyster Bay on Long Island (the latter two added in 1648 and 1653 respectively). It also received the colony at Stamford which had been formed by a group leaving Connecticut. The latter colony at the far western end of present-day Connecticut included land in present-day Greenwich, Ct., and parts of Westchester Co., N.Y. It later added Branford to its towns. They also had a claim to some lands west of the Delaware River, but were unable to do anything with it.

PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS: This colony (actually colonies) organized from the Puritan migration, but included the most radical elements of the settlers. It never established the Puritan churches and was scorned by the Puritan settlements already discussed. Four separate towns (Providence, Portsmouth, Newport, Warwick) were settled by 1643. Portsmouth and Newport united in 1640 as Rhode Island. In 1644 a charter was gained from the Puritan Parliament in England for all the towns under the name Providence Plantations on the Narragansett Bay in New England. A government began to function in 1647. The two Rhode Island towns split away in 1651.

MARTHA'S VINEYARD: The English crown had regained title to the islands south of the New England mainland from the Earl of Stirling in 1640. In 1642 it granted Thomas Mayhew a title to Martha's Vineyard, Nantucket, and adjacent islands.

NEW HAMPSHIRE: In 1622 a grant was given to Mason and Gorges for the lands between the Merrimack and Kennebec Rivers. In 1629 this grant was divided and the lower section (between the Merrimack and Piscataqua Rivers) was assigned to Mason. Under the Council of New England Anglican and secular settlements were made. Dissenters from Massachusetts also began settlements. Disturbed by the non-Puritan spirit of their northern neighbors, Massachusetts held that its title to lands "3 miles north of the Merrimack" meant 3 miles north of its source which was defined as 43° 40' 12" in 1652. They forced all of New Hampshire into submission in 1641. New Hampshire thus ceased its active existence.

MAINE: After the division of the Gorges and Mason grants (made 1622) in 1629, Gorges retained the Maine section between the Piscataqua and Kennebec Rivers. A section along the Kennebec was granted to the Plymouth Colony (1630). Anglican or secular settlements as well as Puritan settlements were begun. Disturbed over the non-Puritan nature of some of these settlements, Massachusetts took over western Maine in 1652 and 1653, at least partly on the 3 miles north of the Merrimack source claim.

Three western Maine towns: Wells, Gorgiana (York), and Piscataqua had formed a joint government for Western Maine in 1649 when the proprietor was detracted by the English Civil War. This area was incorporated into Massachusetts in 1652. One of the Council of New England grants in Western Maine was given in 1630 to an area near the Kennebec later given the specific name Lygonia (which name had earlier been used by the entire Gorges grant). Its separate title outside the Gorges grant was confirmed in 1647 and it had its own government. It was taken over by Massachusetts in 1658 and its separate title was no longer recognized after the restoration.

Eastern Maine, beyond the Kennebec, had been developed by the Plymouth Company as early as 1607 and the Council of New England made a grant of some of it under the name Pemaquid in 1632. However, the development of eastern Maine is also closely related to the history of the Canadian Maritime providences to the east. French settlement in the Canadian area was begun in 1604. French Catholic Indian missions operated in what is now eastern Maine from 1610 to as late as 1763. The Canadian areas, including Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Cape Breton and Prince Edward Island were granted by the English to William Alexander in 1621. English settlement was begun there in 1627, but was abandoned in 1632 when the area was returned to the French. As a result of the loss of his title, the English crown then gave Alexander title to eastern Maine between the Kennebec and St. Croix Rivers in 1635, although this area was still claimed by the French. Massachusetts captured all of the French holdings, taking over eastern Maine as well as the Canadian areas in 1654. In 1656 Cromwell granted eastern Maine and much of the former French lands to LaTour and others, but this grant had little long-lasting effect.

UNITED COLONIES OF NEW ENGLAND: In fear of the Civil War in England spilling over into America, the four Puritan colonies formed the United Colonies of New England (or the New England Confederation) in 1643 (Massachusetts, Plymouth, Connecticut, New Haven). Its control already included New Hampshire and spread to include Maine when Massachusetts took over that area in the 1650's. Rhode Island was excluded. This body was weakened by the merger of Connecticut and New Haven in 1662, and was abolished when Massachusetts' charter was withdrawn in 1684.

THE STUARTS RESTORED:

Fear spread through New England after the non-Puritan Stuart monarchy was restored in England (1660). Initially under Charles II (1660-1685) some attempt at reconciliation was made. Strains, however, exploded under the short rule of James II (1685-1688).

In 1660 Massachusetts resubmitted to its royal charter of 1629.

In 1662 Connecticut gained a new corporate charter from the King for the lands between the 41st and 42nd parallels, east to the Naragansett "River" and west to the "far sea." This brought the Massachusetts settlement at Stonington and the entire New Haven colony under the control of Connecticut. They were also given title to adjacent islands in the Stirling grant not given to Mayhew, mainly Long Island. They were allowed the freedom to continue to elect their own governor. There was resistance to the union in the New Haven colony. Stamford (including Greenwich and Westchester) and Guilford submitted to Connecticut immediately as soon did Southold, Long Island. Milford followed in 1664. New Haven itself began to participate in Connecticut in 1665, the colony ceasing to exist at the end of 1664. Branford, however, was so opposed that the town was abandoned in 1665 and 1666 with the settlers moving to new lands in what was to become Newark, Essex Co., N.J. Four English settlements (the towns of Hempstead, Flushing, Jamaica, and Newtown) in the Dutch New Netherland colony on Long Island decided to leave the Dutch and join Connecticut in 1663. They and Oyster Bay decided to leave Connecticut in 1664, and were included in lands granted by the King to the Duke of York that year, and later in the same year captured from the Dutch.

In 1663 a corporate charter was given by the King to Rhode Island and Providence Plantations which reunited the two sections of that province. They also had the liberty of choosing their own governor. Disputed lands east of the Blackstone River and Narragansett Bay were given to Massachusetts and Plymouth in 1664.

Then things began to worsen for the Puritans.

In 1664 Charles II gave a large grant to his brother the Duke of York (later King James II). The main part of this grant included all the lands between the Connecticut and Delaware Rivers (then mostly in New Netherland) and all of Long Island, Martha's Vineyard, and related islands. He was also given the lands formerly granted to Alexander in eastern Maine. Later that year the English took New Netherland by force and the Duke set up New York under his control. He also put forward a claim to the former Dutch lands on the far side of the Delaware River by this conquest. His grants obviously covered large sections of previously Puritan territory.

Martha's Vineyard submitted to New York in 1664 and was organized as Dukes County in 1683.

KING'S PROVINCE: The new Connecticut and Rhode Island charters overlapped in the area between Narragansett Bay and the Pawcatuck River. Massachusetts also had some claim in the area. In 1665 a commission set up the area as a new province called King's. It was put under the jurisdiction of Rhode Island. Connecticut continued to claim the area until the Province was abolished in 1686.

In 1667 Nova Scotia and its dependences were returned to France.

The boundary dispute between Connecticut and New York was settled in 1667 by awarding all of Long Island to New York as well as that part of Connecticut's claim to the far sea between an area twenty miles east of the Hudson River west to the Delaware River. Connecticut in return was given title from the Connecticut River to 20 miles east of the Hudson.

A similar settlement was made for Massachusetts, giving it title on its sea to sea claim west to 20 miles east of the Hudson and then beginning again on the far side of the Delaware.

Pressure was put on Massachusetts to release its rule in western Maine to the proprietors between 1664 and 1668.

Eastern Maine was organized under New York in 1665. Massachusetts still claimed the territory and was awarded it in a court case in 1668. However, the Duke continued to claim the area, pressed his claim in 1674 and organized Cornwall County in 1683.

During this brief period when the Dutch recaptured New York (1673-1674), three eastern Long Island towns (Easthampton, Southampton, Southold) again attached themselves to Connecticut (Brookhaven and Huntington also tried to resist the Dutch). After the Duke retook control of New York, he not only pressed his title for the Long Island towns but began a dispute over the line of the 1667 Connecticut boundary settlement. This was resurveyed in 1683-1684, and was not finally settled to 1700, after the Duke's turn at being King.

Fearful of the loss of other lands, Massachusetts purchased the deed to the Gorges grant in western Maine in 1677. This, however, had the backfire effect of calling attention to the poor title of Massachusetts to northern New England. The Stuarts, pressed by the Mason heirs, took New Hampshire away from Massachusetts in 1679 and made it a separate colony with a royal charter and a governor appointed by the King. It also received the southern portion of the Isles of Shoals. Massachusetts had assigned all of the Isles to Maine in 1652; however they had been previously split in the Mason title of 1635 to which the King returned in 1679.

Tensions between the Stuarts and Puritan New England increased. In 1684 the charter of Massachusetts Bay Colony was revoked. In New Hampshire the new government tried to impose the Church of England in 1683 and took action against Congregational pastors.

But the final Stuart blow came to New England in 1686 when the Dominion of New England was established. This new royal colony responsible to the King was to unite Massachusetts, Plymouth, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Maine, New York's Cornwall County in Maine and the King's Province. In 1688 New York and East and West (New) Jersey were added to the Dominion.

Luckily for New England, however, James II was deposed in 1688. In 1689 a rebellion overthrew James's Governor Andros and brought the Dominion to an end. Each of the five colonies operated as before (Massachusetts, Plymouth, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Hampshire [under Massachusetts' governor]). Massachusetts regained eastern Maine, and Rhode Island took over the King's Province.

UNDER ORANGE AND HANOVER

After the Glorious Revolution in England, New England settled into the forms of government which would prevail until the American Revolution.

In 1691 a new royal charter was granted for Massachusetts. It included the old Plymouth colony which submitted in 1692. It also included eastern Maine (called Sagadahoc), western Maine, Dukes County, N.Y. and Acadia (or Nova Scotia and dependencies; which had been re-won from the French in 1690). This new charter tempered the theocracy and provided for a governor appointed by the King.

Nova Scotia and its dependencies were taken from Massachusetts in 1697 and returned to the French. It was recaptured by the British in 1710 and made a separate colony permanently in 1713 (except for Cape Breton which was in French hands 1713 to 1741 and 1748 to 1758).

New Hampshire was served by Massachusetts' governors after the Glorious Revolution until 1698, and again from 1699 to 1741. It had only one governor of its own before 1741. Until 1741 it was something of a dependency of Massachusetts.

MAJOR BOUNDARY CHANGES:

Dukes County, N.Y. (Martha's Vineyard, etc.) was granted in the new 1691 charter to Massachusetts, agreed to leave New York in 1692 and was given to Massachusetts in 1695.

The Connecticut-New York boundary was resurveyed in 1683-84 but disputed until 1700 when two Connecticut towns were given to New York (Bedford and Rye). The Connecticut-New York border was finally laid out in 1731.

The Rhode Island-Connecticut border was defined in 1705 and adjusted in 1728.

After a major dispute the Massachusetts-New Hampshire border was rewritten in 1741, putting several Massachusetts towns into New Hampshire, including Plaistow, Salem, Hudson, Litchfield, Pembroke and all territory west of the Merrimack River from the present line north to the old claim of 43° 40' 12". At this time New Hampshire was given its own governor.

Massachusetts also lost a number of towns to Rhode Island in a boundary settlement of 1747 (Little Compton, Tiverton, Barrington, Bristol).

A 1749 survey found three Massachusetts towns realizing they were in part of Connecticut's charter boundaries. They withdrew from Massachusetts then and became part of Connecticut in 1751. These were: Suffield, Enfield (including Somers) and Woodstock.

The Massachusetts-New York border was redrawn in 1787. A minor adjustment was made in 1853.

As late as 1862 Massachusetts had to give up another town and parts of a second in a border dispute with Rhode Island (Pawtucket, and a section of Seekonk which became East Providence).

Western claims of Massachusetts for land in Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Illinois running west to the Mississippi River were given to the Federal government in 1785. A similar claim in western New York and a group of townships in the center of the state were negotiated to that State in 1786.

Connecticut's claims to western lands beyond the Delaware included lands in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana and Illinois. Settlement and town organization was actually begun in the 1760's in northeastern Pennsylvania. Connecticut was forced out of Pennsylvania in 1782. In 1786 it gave up its other western claims except for a Western Reserve in the northeastern corner of Ohio. That also was finally released in 1800.

FROM COLONY TO STATE:

The crown had given additional lands to the New Hampshire colony beyond the Merrimack River to the west. However, no clear boundary was set. Governor Wentworth had begun to give large grants to lands west of the Connecticut River. New York claimed all land west of the Connecticut, north of Massachusetts by the 1664 grant to the Duke of York. Finally in 1764 a court ruled that the land belonged to New York. Since most of the settlement at that date was in eastern Vermont, and was from New England, opposition to New York control was swift and strong. Finally Vermont declared itself independent in 1777. It claimed towns in eastern New York and in western New Hampshire as part of its republic on and off, 1778 to 1786. All of Vermont was awarded to the United States in 1783 by Britain. Vermont finally joined the United States as the 14th state in 1791, after settling its boundary with New York in 1790.

Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Connecticut were part of the United States from 1776, and territorial limits were placed on all by the treaty limits to the United States in 1783.

Maine separated from Massachusetts and became its own state in 1820.

The Maine-Canada boundary was finally set by the Webster-Ashburton Treaty of 1842. The same treaty made minor adjustments to the Canadian boundary with New Hampshire (including giving to New Hampshire title to the area of the 1832 Indian Stream Republic taken by New Hampshire in 1838) and Vermont.

COUNTIES AND EXTINCT COUNTIES

The dates of organization of existing counties are shown in the tables.

CONNECTICUT: Connecticut was first divided into counties in 1666. Extinct counties include a brief attempt to set up a county on Long Island (1673-1674); Westmoreland County in what is now northeast Pennsylvania (1774-1780) and Trumbull County in eastern Ohio (1800-1800).

MAINE: When Maine was taken over by Massachusetts (1652) it was made a county which was named York six years later. Devon County existed between the Kennebec and Penobscot Rivers 1674 to 1684. The sections of Maine which were part of New York were called Cornwall County (1683-1689). The remaining York County was divided in 1760.

MASSACHUSETTS: Massachusetts was divided into counties in 1643. The original Norfolk County included all of New Hampshire and only a small part of what is now Massachusetts. When New Hampshire became its own colony, that county was discontinued (1643-1680).

NEW HAMPSHIRE: New Hampshire was divided into counties in 1769 though there was a delay before some were locally organized.

PLYMOUTH COLONY: Plymouth was divided into counties in 1685.

RHODE ISLAND: Rhode Island was divided into counties in 1703.

VERMONT: Originally Vermont included part of Charlotte County, New York (1772; which became Washington County in 1784), and the now extinct Cumberland County, New York (1766) and Gloucester County, New York (1770), all of which had been taken from Albany County (1683). After Vermont's independence (1777) the republic quickly divided into counties (1778). The Vermont Counties of Cumberland (1781) and Unity (1778) were extinct by 1790.

THE ESTABLISHMENT IN COLONY AND STATE

We have already explored the question of what is a Church.

But we need to also explore the question: In a legal establishment of religion what causes a church to be recognized as such by the State?

Both town governments and gathered churches were quickly formed in the earliest colonies.

The churches were meant to be made up of visible saints. The churches included women and people under 21 years of age and had Biblical officers: pastors, teachers, elders, deacons. In the hope for a purified church many of the early leaders desired that the ordained ministers would be supported with voluntary contributions free from pressure from the outside. This expressed the desire of the Puritans in England to free themselves from the King's control.

However, they also continued to think in traditional English terms. In England, Anglican churches served geographic parishes where taxation supported them. While the New England churches were meant to be covenanted bodies, nonetheless as early as 1630 Massachusetts gave the towns responsibility to support the ordained ministers in their bounds. While this support was at first voluntary contributions it tied each church to the geographic identity of a town. Church worship was also held in multi-purpose meetinghouses built and maintained by the towns.

The colonies and towns, troubled by disorders and concerned about poorly paid preachers, began to impose more of the English traditions. A 1636 Massachusetts law provided that "all future church gatherings [i.e. organizations] must receive the approval of the magistrates and the elders of the greater part of the churches of this jurisdiction." Similar provisions were adopted in Plymouth in 1657 and Connecticut in 1658. Then in 1638 another law allowed that any inhabitant in any town could be compelled to contribute to ministerial support if they did not do so voluntarily. In other words towns could tax anyone to support the ministry of the churches. The Parish system was spelled out in 1647.

In 1644 the United Colonies urged other colonies to approve taxation for ministerial support and that took place in Connecticut in 1644, in New Haven in 1656, and in Plymouth in 1657.

Thus the larger colonies directed each town to oversee their churches. The restrictions on covenanting meant a local church could not exist without a town or parish. Churches organized without parishes were considered schismatic or heretical.

Even though the Cambridge Platform was to provide for the mutual recognition of churches (XV,3;XV,4) the issue of governmental recognition of a parish took precedence over church recognition. To create a church in a new community, or when a city church became overcrowded, or in response to a theological dispute, approval of the government had to first be secured.

Thus, while before 1636 a few churches were covenanted before their towns were organized, after then towns or parishes were supposed to be created before the churches.

At first each town had one church. The town acted in meetinghouse, pastoral support, and related "parish" issues. Later this business was often assigned to a separate meeting called the parish, society or precinct. Parishes had their own officers who were not necessarily the church officers. So there were in each locale two organizations: the church and its parish or town.

MASSACHUSETTS: Under its first charter (1629-1684) church and state were closely related. Initially voting was limited to church members. The legislature often called synods to define the ecclesiastical needs of the colony. However, when Massachusetts received a new charter in 1691, with a governor appointed by the King, and an upper house of its legislature often under urban (Boston) and even Anglican control, we arrive at the rather peculiar situation of Anglican officials maintaining a Puritan establishment. Nonetheless, Massachusetts towns and parishes continued to be tax-collecting entities which supported the "secular" needs of the churches, and in 1693 ordered the churches to accept the "concurrence" of the town in choosing ministers. In 1709 Connecticut allowed those qualified to vote at town meetings to vote with church members for the calling or settling of ministers. These actions reversed some of the clearest hopes of the Puritan founders.

PLYMOUTH: Following separatist origins, Plymouth was never as eager in pushing the establishment as was its neighbor to the north. When forced to submit to the new Massachusetts charter in 1692, there were only 12 of the 19 organized towns in the Plymouth Colony with Puritan churches. (One town had two churches, and three of the seven towns without Puritan congregations shared two Baptist churches.) The number of towns without churches declined quickly after Massachusetts took over.

CONNECTICUT: Connecticut was famous for the greater freedoms it granted to its citizens under its Fundamental Orders of 1639. The franchise was extended to more non-church members in 1657. However, membership in the upper house of the legislature was limited to church members, and the colony established the Saybrook Platform in 1708. Yet Connecticut claimed in 1669 to tolerate the organization of churches by all "orthodox" persons.

NEW HAVEN: New Haven initially limited franchise only to church members. When forced into Connecticut in 1662 it under protest submitted to their broader laws.

NEW HAMPSHIRE: This area was part of Massachusetts from 1641 to 1679. Although its new charter put it under a King-appointed, supposedly Anglican, Governor, it only had one appointed Governor to itself before 1741 and was generally up to that time administered from Massachusetts as a type of child of that colony. This was natural because of the slow progress of the colony. As late as 1730, eleven years before the expansion of its boundaries, New Hampshire only had 17 organized congregations within its border as then defined.

RHODE ISLAND AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS: These settlements never had a Puritan establishment. Churches organized here, or forced into this colony by boundary change were required to form voluntary parishes to support their secular needs.

MAINE: Maine was part of Massachusetts from 1652 to 1820.

CHANGES WITHIN THE ESTABLISHMENT:

The idea of towns supporting one church worked until the population began to grow. Then, in order to keep the Cambridge Platform goal of meeting in one place, churches sought to divide, and therefore needed their parishes to divide with them. This was done in one of two ways. Geographic precincts were drawn which divided towns into two or more areas, each of which would be required to support a particular church. This was the practice in rural areas and generally for New England and occurred in Plymouth Colony in 1642 (Norwell in Scituate), Massachusetts in 1664 (Newton in Cambridge), in Connecticut by 1693 (Glastonbury in Wethersfield), and in New Hampshire by 1715 (Newington in Dover). The other method, peculiar for urban areas, was the establishment of poll parishes, where people would choose which of two or more congregations would receive their support. (Churches in Boston, Massachusetts (proper) continued on a more voluntary support system than other communities.) Eventually geographic parishes were created which included parts of more than one town. The earliest of these were at Bridgeport, Connecticut (in Stratford and Fairfield) in 1695 and at Byfield, Massachusetts (in Newbury and Rowley) in 1702. [In the lists which follow, churches whose stated parishes included more than one town are listed in the town of their primary worship location with the names of other towns in the parish excluded, unless required for some other reason. The use of "etc." following the town name implies the overlapping of the parish into other towns.]

Established Congregational churches had either a local form with or without ruling elders. Later congregations with ruling elders of Scottish origin and statedly Presbyterian gained establishment privilege in New Hampshire in 1722 (when town rights were given to the 1719 Derry Church), in Voluntown, Ct. in 1723 (when a statedly Presbyterian church was organized in the new 1721 town) and in Palmer, Ma. by 1734.

Separatist or Strict Congregational churches did not have parishes. Those which rejoined the parent church were usually formed with poll parishes. This happened in Exeter and Madbury, N.H. (both 1755), Scarborough, Me. (then Ma.) 1758, and New Haven, Ct. 1759.

Occasionally, and after 1730 more commonly, Massachusetts did allow churches to covenant in plantations, districts, or townships, not yet fully organized as towns. The plantations, districts, or townships, however, still undertook the parish functions.

After 1741, Governor Wentworth of New Hampshire triggered an extensive land speculation by giving grants for much of the land of New Hampshire and Vermont, creating these land grant holders into town corporations. His move, however, was without ecclesiastical connection and several towns were "organized" long before they were settled. [We have therefore ceased to print town or parish data for New Hampshire or Vermont after 1741 unless there is a specific reason to do so.] As churches were formed in northern New England it often became common for a single congregation to serve more than one town. One particularly confusing set of churches were organized straddling the Connecticut River and serving towns in both what is now New Hampshire and Vermont.

CHANGES IN THE ESTABLISHMENT'S RELATION TO OTHER RELIGIONS:

Massachusetts's rules limiting the franchise to church members were modified when it took over New Hampshire (1641) and Maine (1652). Similar orders were abolished in New Haven when Connecticut took it over (1662) and modified in Massachusetts by law (1664) by allowing in addition to church members those who could obtain a certificate from a minister that they were "orthodox in religion and not viscious in life" to vote. This was all abolished when Massachusetts lost its charter (1684).

After the Glorious Revolution in England, Parliament adopted a law allowing freedom of conscience regarding belief and worship (1689). Liberty of conscience to all but "papists" was written into the new 1691 Massachusetts charter. (Towns were still required to be provided with "an able, learned, orthodox minister of good conversation.") This policy of freedom was also enacted by Connecticut in its Toleration Act of 1708. Under these acts Anglicans, Baptists, Quakers, etc. were able to worship but still had to pay taxes to the established parish, except in Boston, Ma., where these groups were exempted from taxation under a special exemption from 1691.

The King's Rule of 1726 encouraged tax relief for members of specific religions. Massachusetts responded with a special tax plan for the Church of England in 1727 and exemptions for Quakers and Baptists in 1728. Connecticut followed the same pattern exempting Quakers and Baptists in 1729, and Anglicans earlier in 1727. People not certifying membership in one of these groups still had to support the established parish.

Connecticut reversed itself somewhat on its 1708 toleration act when it specifically limited freedom of worship to groups outside the Congregational and Presbyterian tradition specifically approved by the legislature (generally Anglicans, Baptists, and Quakers) (1743). In other words schismatic Congregational or Presbyterian worship was specifically banned. Massachusetts also in 1752-1753 tried to tighten liberties claimed by Separate Baptists but repealed these rules in 1770.

In general New Hampshire followed the establishment practices of Massachusetts.

Change occurred quickly after the Revolutionary War. New Hampshire continued its practices as before after 1776, although there was no mention of religion in its Constitution of that year. In 1783 it provided that all protestant groups could worship and receive tax support from their members. Massachusetts' new Constitution of 1780 provided for freedom of religion, but the establishment was still supported in an act of 1786. Connecticut disestablished the Saybrook Platform in 1784, allowing all churches, but tax support continued. Vermont, which became independent in 1777, never had an establishment as such, but allowed local tax support for churches.

Generally speaking the provisions above which followed the war allowed for a local option establishment. Towns supported the churches in their bounds. Since most of these were Congregational, it was Congregational churches that were supported. However, we find a Scottish Seceder Church established in Barnet, vt. in 1780 and an Episcopal Church established in Holderness, N.H. in 1789. Some towns provided union meeting houses for the use of several denominations. After 1780 the Massachusetts legislature made little effort to coordinate the setting up of towns with church provision. (Then mainly involving Maine.) [We have discontinued the giving of town and parish information in Maine and Massachusetts after 1780. We have continued to give it in Connecticut until a new Constitution was adopted in 1818. In all cases where later information is helpful, however, it is inserted.]

The discontinuation of any provision of tax support for churches followed in Vermont in 1807, New Hampshire 1817 (all churches on the same basis), Connecticut 1818 (new Constitution), Maine 1820 (separated from Massachusetts) and finally Massachusetts (after the stresses and strains of the Dedham court case, and liberalizations of the tax laws in 1800 and 1811) in 1834).

As the parishes or societies were set free of tax support they continued the dual system. Charters of societies or parishes were continued as voluntary associations.

These parishes were the only body recognized legally. The famous Dedham case in Massachusetts (1820), ruled that the churches really had no legal existence and even their records belonged to the parish. Because of this (during the Unitarian departure) many churches who lost their parishes were left without legal existence and had to organize new parishes with names to protect their peculiar faith (such as Congregational, Trinitarian, Evangelical, Calvinistic, etc.).

It was only in the late 19th Century, when women could become members of corporations, that the various New England states allowed their churches to incorporate and hold property.

This was often done by the parishes and churches uniting under the parish's charter or certificate of incorporation. Thus many churches legally date themselves from the organization of their parish and not the church. (We have, however, tried to keep the two dates clear.)

In most cases, though, the churches incorporated directly under their own name (their first legal one) and the parishes were later abolished and transferred their assets to the church. In a few cases incorporated churches and parishes both exist side by side. In other cases the situation remains the same as the early 19th Century with an unincorporated church and a legally chartered parish.

The process of legal incorporation still confuses church dating. Often legal corporations were formed before churches were covenanted. Even in the Twentieth Century it is not uncommon to find some free or union meetinghouse society which after years of operating a building seeks to be recognized as a church, often gaining that recognition without the formal act of covenanting.

PRESBYTERIAN AND CONGREGATIONAL DIFFERENCES

Those of us acquainted mostly with modern denominationalism could conclude that it would be easy to distinguish a Congregational from a Presbyterian church.

In early New England, however, that is not the case.

There were divergent opinions in New England as to how to organize a church. While advocates of some ideas were labeled "presbyterian" they may have supported one aspect of today's Presbyterian churches but just as fiercely advocate a position on another issue that we would call congregational.

Issues in debate included:

- Did Synods include only elders or elders and messengers of the churches?
- Does a local church require a written covenant?
- Should the office of ruling elder exist?
- Should local church discipline be handled by the elders or by the congregation as a whole? (Who holds the "power of the keys?")
- Should clergy belong to local churches or only to judicatories?
- Should pastors be ordained by the local church only or by some agency of the wider church?
- Should any judicatory have final authority over a local church?
- Is church membership limited to the spiritually pure in voluntary communities or is it comprehensive and national?

The last of these issues ("saintly" called out membership) is an interesting one. Congregationalism has generally maintained the narrower definition of church membership except it has had to sustain that against the assaults of the Half-Way Covenant and Solomon Stoddard.

Presbyterians, however, were unable to defend the Scottish position of a national church membership in America, so moved toward a more Congregational stance. This change therefore can not be a clear one to distinguish the two groups.

Whereas Presbyterianism, particularly in its formal denominated period has had rigid positions on the other issues, Congregationalism has been less doctrinaire, pulled between the twin poles of freedom and fellowship.

To distinguish churches of the two groups, this writer sees submission to a judicatory as the key issue. Surely congregations that have joined a judicatory which has a rigid Presbyterian position on all these issues and where the local church has submitted on all such issues, then that local church is indeed at such time Presbyterian.

However, we would contend that any congregation of the English-Scottish Reformed family which allowed for freedom on many of these issues was not Presbyterian but Congregational. Thus some bodies which at some point in their history were called Presbyterian were by this definition Congregational.

Indeed the words are often used interchangeably. The General Association of Connecticut, for example, entered the Plan of Union in 1801 as a representative of the Congregational churches, but in 1805 referred to itself as the "Presbyterian Church in Connecticut." This same double naming was also common for local churches, particularly in Connecticut. Similarly, bodies such as the Mountain Presbytery never insisted on many rigid positions usually considered aspects of a Presbytery.

Notice, though, we distinguish between membership in something called a judicatory or acting as a judicial body and actual submission to the same. The consociations of Connecticut and other states, for instance, acted in a judicial way. However, local churches often merely withdrew from their jurisdiction. Nor did consociations ever try to impose all the details of the Presbyterian system.

The Congregational family was the family that allowed freedom in these areas and was often filled with a myriad of schools of thought.

While much has been made of the Separatist origin of the Plymouth settlers as an early definition of congregationalism, we tend to view that as merely one of the factions within the free congregational mix. The Puritans who settled first at Massachusetts Bay, had not separated from the Church of England until their long trip across the Atlantic. They arrived here with disagreements as to the details of ecclesiology. The Separates became merely another faction in that discussion.

Another faction in early New England could be labeled presbyterian, but they are not the same as later rigid presbyterians. Their openness on many issues made them a faction within congregationalism.

Part of the reason for this early mix in New England was the fact that clear distinctions between presbyterians and congregationalists could not be articulated in old England until the Civil War there, and the various votes taken at the Westminster assembly (1643-1652) which defined presbyterians on the other side of the Atlantic.

The Cambridge Platform (1648) clearly put the majority of New England in accord with free Congregationalism and the minority faction at Westminster.

It is also common in modern times to think of presbyterians as Scottish and Irish and congegationalists as English and Welsh. This is a terrible oversimplification, particularly at the time of the first New England settlements. At that time stately Protestant Scotland had not completely overthrown bishops and was divided between king and general assembly until after Westminster. Nor was there much Scottish immigration to New England until a later date.

In the early days we have to assume in the establishment colonies that a church approved by the state and recognized by the neighboring churches in vicinage councils was part of this family of churches and therefore congregational even if it harbored some presbyterian teaching.

This began to change through time. Scottish immigration with a clearly presbyterian point of view entered New England in the 18th Century. Beginning in New Hampshire some towns were allowed to organize stately Presbyterian churches while continuing as part of the establishment. However, if they did not submit to a judicatory they could still be considered congregational with merely some unusual local forms. We have included all pre-Revolutionary established churches in this study. In the period from 1720 on we would describe an established Presbyterian church as one submitting to a judicatory. The judicatories also included some Presbyterian churches which were schismatic from the town churches and not established. Presbyteries also sometimes included in membership a pastor of a church which remained congregational and never submitted to presbytery.

As time went on with the failure of the establishment and the development of associated congregationalism, churches could be told by what bodies they belonged to. Even in the 19th Century, however, that was not the easiest definition.

The Presbyterian Synod of New York and Philadelphia and the General Association of Connecticut had sponsored cooperative conventions from 1766 to 1775. Thus began an intermingling of their identities which led to the Plan of Union. In 1791-1792 the Presbyterian General Assembly and the General Association of Connecticut began to exchange delegates. Soon the delegates were given vote at each other's bodies. Later similar arrangements were set up between the General Assembly and other New England state bodies and delegates voted at each other's sessions until 1827. Exchange of non-voting delegates continued thereafter.

Cooperation was also increased by the approval of the General Assembly and the Connecticut General Association of the Plan of Union in 1801. Aimed at the missionary needs of the frontier it provided for mixed Presbyterian-Congregational churches and for the service of Congregational pastors in Presbyterian churches and Presbyterian pastors in Congregational churches. Because of its frontier direction it had little specific effect on New England churches but clearly muddied definitions.

This situation was still further complicated in 1807 and 1808 when the Presbyterian Synod of Albany agreed to receive local Congregational churches and even entire Congregational associations into the Synod while maintaining their congregational usages (called the accommodation plan). Presbyteries had had individual churches with congregational forms in the eighteenth century. This action widened and endorsed this trend, reversing the trend toward Presbyterian rigidity. While again this did not specifically affect New England churches it also further complicated definitions.

Later in the century clearer separation of the two groups began to emerge. Delegate votes were repealed in 1827. The issues of definition of real presbyterianism led to a division of the Presbyterian General Assembly in 1837-1838. The Old School faction enforced rigid presbyterianism and abolished the Plan of Union. The New School faction continued both the Plan of Union and the accommodation plan. Congregationalists withdrew from the Plan of Union by the Albany Convention of 1852. New School bodies, however, continued to hold Congregational churches in membership until the Presbyterian reunion of 1870.

During this period it became popular to call a Presbyterian church one with ruling elders and discipline done in session, and a Congregational church as one without ruling elders and discipline by the entire congregation. We must reject this definition. From the start of New England many congregations, most at the start, had ruling elders. Today many have used their freedom to transfer discipline and membership concerns to the diaconate. Therefore the elder or discipline issues are not the key issues. The key issue is submission to a presbytery.

Because, however, of the obvious overlap of these definitions, and the membership of some statedly Presbyterian churches in congregational bodies, we have chosen to include in this study all Presbyterian churches in New England (including Covenanter and Seceder) organized by 1837 (the year of the Old School-New School split in the Presbyterian Church U.S.A.), all New School Presbyterian churches organized by 1852 (the year the Albany Congregational Convention abolished the Plan of Union) and all Presbyterian churches belonging to congregational bodies after that year. These are for the most part churches which submitted to a presbyterian judicatory and the dates of judicatory alignment are given. A few other specifically Scottish Presbyterian churches which may have been too isolated to be in a Presbytery are also treated as presbyterian.

Because of the local form definition for these two types of churches popular in the late 18th and early 19th centuries many churches voted to "change their form" among these two forms of local organization. We show these dates as reorganization dates and do not thereby yield the definition above.

It should be noted here that congregations belonging to the Morris County Presbytery and Westchester, Northern, and Saratoga Associated Presbyteries are noted as such, and were really congregational, as these bodies did not require submission of local churches.

We have not treated congregations in the Mountain Presbytery as Presbyterian as that body became congregational.

Following most other historians we have noted a presbyterian period for all churches in the Grafton Presbytery. However, it appears that many if not most of the churches in that Presbytery never submitted to local presbyterian forms.

When an established church submitted to a presbytery or when a church which had submitted to a presbytery concurrently belonged to a congregational body we must consider those congregations as the equivalent of the modern dually aligned church.

It should be remembered that the most important problem in separating presbyterians from congregationalists derives from the fact that both groups are part of the Reformed family. In areas of faith, other than the issues debated above, the Cambridge Platform supported the Westminster Assembly. Similarly the United Church of Christ and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) today are both members of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. The agreements outweigh the disagreements.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF ASSOCIATED CONGREGATIONALISM

The founders of New England, while providing for the autonomy of congregations, expected a mutual recognition and fellowship amongst these churches.

The Plymouth congregation immediately sent a representative to the Bay settlements to extend the right hand of fellowship. The Cambridge Platform specifically encouraged the "communion of churches one with another" (XV) noting, among several ways in which this may be done, mutual recognition through the "right hand of fellowship" (XV,3). It also provided for the "sentence of non-communication" for offending congregations (XV,2,III). It further provided for the existence of Synods (XVI) made up of "churches, sending forth their Elders [&] other messengers" (XVI,2). It further provided for "counsels, to debate and determine controversies of faith, & cases of conscience" (XVI,4).

However, two factors worked against the early constant fellowship of the churches. One was the establishment and the role of the magistrate. Since the colonies assumed the right to recognize churches (and since in at least two early colonies the government was entirely church members) the need for the churches to do that for themselves was thus weakened. The other issue which must always be remembered was the primitive and difficult means of transportation which isolated the colonial towns for decades.

There were also debates as to what was the proper membership of associated meetings and whether they could be standing bodies with officers serving between sessions, or whether they could only be temporary bodies concluding their business at adjournment.

Nevertheless, several bodies began to appear at an early date.

Ecclesiastical Councils were the most common form of cooperation amongst the churches. Composed of elders and messengers they advised neighboring churches on ordination, installation, disputes, etc. They were temporary bodies whose existence ended at adjournment. Churches to be represented were invited by local churches or groups in local churches. The size of a council's invitation list depended upon the wealth and prestige of the church calling the council (more specifically their ability to pay the costs of the delegates attending). As time went on Councils fell into disrespect as factions in disputes would only invite their friends to moderate the controversy.

Synods. Of highest respect were the Synods composed of elders

(originally including ruling elders) and messengers of the churches. The breadth of their membership encouraged attention and the Cambridge Platform specifically recommended "reverence & submission" to their proceedings (XVI,5). While the Platform provided that either the churches or the magistrate may call synods, all early New England synods were called by the magistrate as part of the establishment.

Early synods of note were:

- 1637 at Cambridge, Ma. (called Newtowne Synod; on the antinomian controversy, serving Massachusetts and Connecticut).
- 1646 to 1648 at Cambridge, Ma. (author of the Cambridge Platform, called by Massachusetts but including representatives of some of the other colonies).
- 1657 at Boston, Ma. (a delegated convention not properly a Synod, serving Massachusetts and Connecticut).
- 1662 at Boston, Ma. (the Half Way Covenant Synod serving Massachusetts).
- 1679 to 1680 at Boston, Ma. (the Reforming Synod serving Massachusetts).
- 1708 at Saybrook, Ct. (author of the Saybrook Platform serving Connecticut).

None of these synods were standing synods and all were dismissed at their adjournment.

Conventions. The conventions were rather informal gatherings of the pastors in the colonial capitols to hear the election sermons. They became easy opportunities for the clergy to gather annually and to stage debates on matters of interest. They were powerless but historically interesting events.

The Ancient Massachusetts Convention of Congregational Ministers began to meet in the early 1600's and had a formal organization by 1680. It still carries on an existence as a mixed Unitarian, Trinitarian gathering.

The Convention of Ministers in Connecticut also began in the 1600's though it took on some formal status in 1751. Since the General Association (see below) developed most quickly in this colony the convention died out.

The General Convention of Ministers of New Hampshire began in 1747, six years after the colony had gained its own governor but died in 1860.

A convention was also meeting in Rhode Island by 1760.

Presbyteries or Associations. Far more controversial than any of the above were the more formal called gatherings of the clergy to discuss issues of import. These were feared by many local churches because they only included elders (at first teaching and ruling) but excluded messengers of the churches. The fear was that they would conspire against the laity and attempt to assume the powers of the presbyterian system.

Undoubtedly some pastors coveted such power while others merely sought communication and mutual sharing.

Among the more widely attended, known and respected meetings of this type were the gatherings at Cambridge, Ma. in 1643 and 1645 and Connecticut's Assembly of Ministers in 1667 (which included some Massachusetts delegates).

However, a smaller group more committed to regular clergy meetings, most likely as a standing body, began to meet in Massachusetts as early as 1632 and continued for over a decade and possibly intermittently thereafter to the late 1670's. However, the fears of the laity and the regular meetings of synods during this period led to its demise.

Associations. The shock of the revocation of the Massachusetts Charter in 1684 and the terrors which followed under Governor Andros forced New England out of their complacency about mutual bonds of fellowship amongst the churches. With New Hampshire potentially assigned to an Anglican Governor appointed by the King (1679) and Massachusetts (then to include Plymouth) assigned to the same fate (1691) the ability or skill of the magistrate to maintain the churches was questioned.

Here began to emerge a new relational identity to the family of churches other than the establishment.

Almost immediately ministerial associations sprung up all over New England including Cambridge (or Boston) (1690) Essex (by 1690) and Plymouth (by 1700). While not all the clergy were involved in these Associations, they persisted, and from that day on some type of association existed in most sections of New England.

In 1704 the Massachusetts Convention called for the strengthening of associations and their free communications with one another. Five associations in eastern Massachusetts sent delegates to a meeting in 1705 which recommended the strengthening of associations, an annual general meeting of representatives of the associations, and also the organization of consociations in each of the associated areas to be made up of pastors and delegates of the churches. Consociations had already been suggested by the Synod of 1662 but had not materialized.

One might have thought that the proposals for strengthening the church - after the waning of ties with England, and the non-presbyterian decision to include non-elders in consociations, would have won the day for strengthening the church's associating. However, some attacked the plan as too presbyterian.

The plan would have required a new synod to institute it and on that issue it failed in Massachusetts. The present author is inclined to agree with Williston Walker (Creeds pp. 492-494) that this failure came in the legislature (the magistrate) to call a synod. Here the Anglican-leaning Governor and his veto power over seats in the upper house of the legislature no doubt played a part.

In Connecticut, however, where the people elected their own governor and legislature, a synod was promptly called (1708) and the proposals were adopted. In the next year five Associations and five Consociations following county lines and a General Association were all formed.

Here began a century of divergence between Connecticut and the rest of New England. Connecticut maintained a strong system of inter-church contact. Western Massachusetts, beginning with the Hampshire Association (chartered 1714), tried to emulate the Connecticut situation with strong geographically defined associations initially along county lines as well.

In eastern New England, however, associations came and went, had shifting memberships and unclear boundaries, often overlapping each other and colony boundaries.

Presbyterian Judicatories. There were two types of Scottish immigrant congregations in the eighteenth century: some were established churches, and some were opposed to the common order round about them; these and non-Scottish factions from established churches which had declared themselves presbyterian, soon formed presbyteries. Presbyteries, while made up only of ordained ministers and ruling elders considered themselves to have jurisdiction over churches.

Presbyterian Church U.S.A. This main Presbyterian body originating in the middle colonies as a presbytery (1706), became a Synod (1717) divided along Old Light-New Light lines (1745), reunited as a Synod (1758), and formed a General Assembly (1789). It had a limited number of congregations on and off in New England from 1743. For its nineteenth century Londonderry and Newburyport Presbyteries see below.

Presbytery of Londonderry. Begun c. 1729 this organization died out before 1781.

Presbytery of Boston. Organized as a new light group 1745, it expanded into a three presbytery Synod of New England in 1775, reorganized as the Salem Presbytery in 1782, and disbanded in 1791.

Presbytery at the Eastward. Organized in 1771, this body merged into the Associate Reformed Church's Londonderry Presbytery in 1793.

Presbytery of Grafton (or Connecticut Valley). Apparently organized in 1775 this group usually considered purely presbyterian seems to have included congregations which never departed from congregational forms. It also received "delegates" not necessarily ruling elders from member churches. While most sources date its demise at 1794 or 1795, it appears that a small body probably continued to about 1807.

Mountain Presbytery. Organized in western Massachusetts in 1790 this body mostly included congregations which always had congregational forms. It became a constituent part of the General Association of Massachusetts and changed its name to Association, so must be considered a congregational body.

Associate Church (Presbyterian). This denomination of Scottish Seceders received a New England congregation in its New York Presbytery in 1778. This Presbytery and its congregations joined in the 1782 merger which constituted the:

Associate Reformed Church. This merged group of Covenanter and Seceder Scottish Presbyterian Churches formed 1782 received the New England congregations of the Associate Church. In 1786 it organized these into a (new) Londonderry Presbytery. In 1793 that Presbytery absorbed the former Eastward Presbytery. In 1801 the Presbytery was excluded from the denomination although some congregations were claimed by the denomination to as late as 1806. (The parent group did not reenter New England until 1845).

Londonderry Presbytery. This body was excluded from the Associate Reformed Church in 1801 and became independent. In 1809 it began to explore union with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church U.S.A. and was received by them in 1811. It continued with them and was slow to decide for the New School or Old School side after the 1837 division of the denomination being claimed by both until dropped by the New School after 1846. It continued with the Old School.

Newburyport Presbytery was organized within the General Assembly Presbyterian Church U.S.A. in 1826. It always had only a few congregations and served mainly to hold standing for presbyterian ministers serving Congregational churches. After the Presbyterian schism of 1837, this Presbytery became independent in 1838 but was claimed by the New School General Assembly until 1846. By 1847 its last church had joined an Old School Presbytery.

Presbyterian Church U.S.A. In addition to the two above-named presbyteries, a handful of congregations in western New England belonged to New York Presbyteries before 1837 and at least one congregation to a New School New York Presbytery between 1837 and 1852.

Associate Church (Presbyterian). The Seceder Church which opposed the 1782 merger with the Covenanters entered New England in 1790.

Reformed Presbyterian Church. The Scottish Covenanter Church had been briefly active in New England around 1759 before the 1782 merger. However, in the year the non-merging Covenanter group reorganized (1798) a congregation was organized in New England. It and other congregations went with the Synod faction of this group after their 1833 division.

Non-Established Congregational Bodies. After the Strict Separatist split during the Great Awakening of the 1740's these "Strict Congregational Churches" had both ecclesiastical councils and conventions. Standing bodies which included New England churches included:

Strict Congregational Convention of Connecticut, organized 1781, strengthened 1784-1785 and disbanded in 1811.

Presbytery of Morris County (Associated) organized 1780, had entered New England by 1790. It transferred its New England membership to the Associated Presbytery of Westchester when it was organized in 1792. The parent Presbytery probably died around 1820 while Westchester continued to 1830. The Associated Presbytery of Saratoga (1807-1818) also included one congregation in New England, and the Northern Associated Presbytery (1793-after 1833) had at least one also.

The Strict Congregational Convention of Long Island (organized 1791) included one congregation in New England 1818 to 1834.

Missionary Societies. The dual New England system of church and parish also disturbed the wider church. If churches could not incorporate, neither could their associations, general associations or other bodies. This issue came to the forefront clearly when issues of missionary outreach came up.

Early widespread support for missions had been handled by the pro-Puritan English "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in New England" otherwise known as the Company of New England and chartered by the long Parliament in 1649. Later mission support was handled by the Scottish Society for Propagating Christian Knowledge and others.

When the end of the war raised the national consciousness and a reliance on Europe for missionary aid declined, missionary societies were created in New England often led by lay people.

Some early missionary societies were created by concerned individuals in the churches, and eventually affiliated with the wider church. However, the Connecticut Missionary Society was created directly by the General Association of Connecticut to serve it. The larger state missionary societies, even those which came before their state general associations (or equivalent bodies), eventually became attached to these bodies similar to the way a church and its local parish were related. Early smaller local missionary societies were absorbed by the state or later national missionary societies, although a few became Unitarian or remained independent. These societies included:

- Massachusetts Congregational Charitable Society (1786, served Massachusetts Convention to benefit widows and orphans of ministers; continues).
- Society for Propagating the Gospel among Indians and others in North America (incorporated 1787, called Boston Missionary Society; still independent).
- Berkshire and Columbia Missionary Society (planned 1797, organized 1798).
- Missionary Society of Connecticut (1798).
- Massachusetts Missionary Society (1799).
- New Hampshire Missionary Society (1801).
- Hampshire Missionary Society (Western Massachusetts; 1802).
- Rhode Island Missionary Society (1802 or 1803).
- Vermont Missionary Society (1807).
- Maine Missionary Society (1807).
- Evangelical Missionary Society in Massachusetts (organized 1807, became Unitarian).
- Domestic Missionary Society of Connecticut (1816).
- Domestic Missionary Society of Massachusetts (1818).

Changing Patterns of Associating After Independence. When the Revolutionary War ended Connecticut had a formal system of inter-church organizations including regional associations of ministers, consociations of churches (including lay delegates), and the General Association made up of representatives of the local associations. The rest of New England had ministerial associations with irregular boundaries, as well as the clergy conventions.

Some of the Presbyterian judicatories already discussed were attempts to involve lay people and local churches in inter-church activity.

As the population moved north, ministerial associations were formed in most of New England. Some associations began to see themselves as representatives of the churches following the example of Baptist associations and presbyterian structures.

However, pressure still increased for more lay involvement. This was particularly true on the frontier where the number of churches grew faster than the supply of ministers and vacant churches sought aid and identity.

Local consociations were organized outside Connecticut in Vermont (by 1799), Rhode Island (1809) and Maine (1809).

However, some people felt that the Connecticut consociations had too often tried to act like presbyteries and therefore disliked the word. As an alternative, therefore, they started to create local conferences of churches, made up of delegates, which disdained all ecclesiastical authority. The first of these was in Massachusetts in 1821, followed by Maine in 1822, and New Hampshire (by 1826). Eventually even Connecticut began to organize local conferences (1854), by then usually replacing some earlier consociation. Through time most of the consociations were replaced with conferences.

(Confusingly, conference or consociation boundary lines did not always parallel those of ministerial associations in the same general territory.)

State Bodies. The decline of the establishment finally led the other states to seek some type of state fellowship following the century-earlier Connecticut plan.

The General Convention of Ministers of the State of Vermont was planned in 1795 and organized in 1796. It included several leaders of the former Grafton Presbytery, and despite its name was really organized as a General Association. It provided for representation from both associations and presbyteries.

The General Association of Massachusetts Proper was planned in 1802 and organized in 1803. Several associations in the state refused to join the new body. Some became Unitarian; others delayed to as late as 1841 to affiliate. Still others were broken in twain and replaced by Trinitarian and Unitarian associations. A few Presbyterian churches whose pastors were members of local associations came under the care of this General Association.

The General Association of Congregational and Presbyterian Churches in New Hampshire began in 1809. As did its Associations, it included several Presbyterian pastors. From 1853 on it carefully distinguished between its Congregational and Presbyterian congregations.

The Evangelical Association of Ministers of Rhode Island was organized in 1808 and reorganized as the Evangelical Consociation of Rhode Island in 1809.

The General Conference of Maine was planned in 1824 and organized in 1826.

These six state groups became the denomination, taking the role of recognition away from the governmental establishment. It is interesting to parallel the dates of the first listings of churches published by these bodies and the end of the establishment.

The first lists appeared in both New Hampshire and Vermont in 1819. New Hampshire had ended the establishment in 1817. Vermont, which never had an establishment, had ended tax support in 1807.

Connecticut's establishment was discontinued in 1818 and its first list was published 1820.

Maine's establishment ended 1820 and its first list appeared 1828.

Massachusetts' establishment did not end until 1834 but its first list appeared 1826, which while ahead of the disestablishment was one year after the formation of the American Unitarian Association.

Rhode Island, which never had an establishment, was the last state to publish its lists. While it apparently made plans for lists beginning with the 1833 minutes, and submitted list reports to others (such as the Congregational Almanac), lists in its own minutes did not appear until 1847.

For some time after the first lists were published, four of the six state groups were ministerial bodies, yet they considered themselves the recognizing body for all churches. Vacant churches were listed as under their care. New Hampshire headed its lists "Associations united in the General Association;" Connecticut labeled theirs "towns, Congregational Societies and ministers....in connection with the General Association;" and Massachusetts said "churches [and] pastors....in the several Associations united in the General Association." Steps to include lay delegates in the four state organizations other than Maine and Rhode Island followed their assumption of denominational tasks.

A General Consociation had been held in Connecticut in 1741 (it is sometimes referred to as a synod). Attempts thereafter to make that a standing body failed.

A Massachusetts General Conference was created in 1860. It merged with the General Association in 1868. This body then merged with the Missionary Society in 1927 and 1928 to form the Massachusetts Congregational Conference and Missionary Society, and is now known as the Massachusetts Conference of the United Church of Christ. It operates under the old Missionary Society charter.

A General Conference of the Congregational Churches of Connecticut was created in 1867-1868 by local conferences and consociations. By 1870 it had taken over the Connecticut Home Missionary Society (formerly the Domestic Missionary Society of Connecticut) and most of the functions of the General Association. The Conference and the Missionary Society of Connecticut were united in 1879-1880 under the Society charter which at that time became the fiscal agent of the Conference. The General Association ceased to be a delegated body in 1897 and served as an agency of record for ministerial standing to 1905. After that it continued only for educational and historic purposes. The Conference reorganized as the Connecticut Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches under the Society charter in 1933, and is now known as the Connecticut Conference of the United Church of Christ.

In Maine the General Conference and Missionary Society merged in 1909-1910 as the Congregational Conference and Missionary Society of Maine, reincorporated in 1931 as the Maine Congregational Christian Conference and is now known as the Maine Conference of the United Church of Christ.

In New Hampshire the General Association seated lay delegates from conferences in 1859. It and the Missionary Society were united and incorporated as the New Hampshire Congregational Conference in 1913-1914. It was reorganized as the New Hampshire Congregational Christian Conference in 1932 and is now known as the New Hampshire Conference of the United Church of Christ.

In Vermont the General Convention agreed to seat lay delegates from consociations in 1821 and conferences in 1840. It was incorporated in 1872 and again by merger as the Vermont Congregational Conference and Domestic Missionary Society in 1917. It is now known as the Vermont Conference of the United Church of Christ.

In Rhode Island the Consociation became the Rhode Island Congregational Conference in 1864, and incorporated and merged to the Missionary Society in 1911-1912. It is now known as the Rhode Island Conference of the United Church of Christ.

These unifications of the church bodies and missionary societies were early fostered by shared meeting places and time periods for annual meetings and even common minute books. This had happened in all the New England states except Massachusetts by 1865.

Originally delegated bodies through member associations, conferences, etc., the general bodies took on the form of direct delegations from churches in New Hampshire 1892, Massachusetts and Vermont 1893, Connecticut 1894, and Maine 1895.

As changes occurred at the state level, the local organizations also changed. Population shifts caused frequent changes in the boundaries of local bodies. Eventually the local consociations, conferences and associations were consolidated into united bodies made up of clergy and lay delegates and called (with one exception) associations. (The present author plans to eventually publish a list of all the congregational inter-church bodies in New England.)

A National Fellowship. Mutual recognition of the various state bodies was begun by an exchange of delegates one with the other as early as 1802. A General Association of New England was proposed in 1818 but never formed. National conventions were held in 1852, 1865 and 1870.

A standing body, the National Council of Congregational Churches was organized in 1871 representing the various state bodies. In 1931 it united with the General Convention of the Christian Church to form the General Council of Congregational (and) Christian Churches. It in turn united with the Evangelical and Reformed Church in 1957 to form the United Church of Christ.

Bodies which included Congregational churches not entering the United Church of Christ include:

Conservative Congregational Christian Conference, organized 1948, entered New England in 1958.

National Association of Congregational Christian Churches, organized 1955, declared itself to be the successor to the General Council in 1961.

Both of these bodies include churches directly represented by delegates, with the former also allowing for ministerial members.

SEPARATIST CHURCHES

A few non-established churches which attempted to organize as Congregational churches, but could not, are shown in this study and specified as such.

The Separate or Strict Congregational churches were a separate denomination arising out of the Great Awakening (1740's). They are included in this study. Some splits in established churches by groups favoring this position or related tendencies but which never organized churches are also noted in the discussions of the appropriate established churches. Several of these churches either gained recognition as established churches or reunited to established churches. Several others became Baptist churches. A few became Shaker or Sandemanian and the rest died out.

In some communities some established churches held ideas so similar to the Separates that they were often considered separate congregations. In a few cases we have noted such in the text, but established churches must be considered established.

These churches began to have general meetings as early as 1753. At a meeting in Killingly, Ct. in 1781 a plan was proposed to structure the group with regular delegated meetings and doctrinal heads of agreement. These were approved and were set in place in 1782. At two meetings in 1784 it was proposed to strengthen these relations in a Strict Congregational Convention of Connecticut which was proposed to the churches and began to operate in 1785. We have identified the churches attending the 1782 to 1784 meetings and those members of the group from 1785 through its last meeting in 1811. Some of these churches had by this date secured poll parish privileges but we have continued to identify them as Separate.

For a while there were also a group of Separate Baptist open communion churches that considered themselves part of the same body as the Separate Congregationalists. Beginning in 1750 churches in both groups had joint councils and two conventions: one in 1753, and a rump one in 1754 which asserted that they were the same group. However, another earlier 1754 convention ended in a split between the major parts of the two groups. Again definitions are a concern and dividing the two groups is difficult. We would contend that churches which voted themselves Baptist, had mass immersions or joined Baptist bodies would not be considered Separate Congregational. But beyond that, while lines are confusing, we have not claimed as Separate Congregational churches here any which every other authority has called Separate Baptist, although some could probably be considered Separate Congregational. All churches shown here as Separate Congregational are considered such by some source although some did include immersed members and cooperate with Separate Baptists.

In a few cases where an established church held some separatist views, independent non-established Old Light congregations opposed to separatist ideas were organized. A few Old Light schisms in established churches which did not result in new churches are also noted in the text.

A later split among the established churches in Connecticut occurred in 1810 when the General Association of that state limited the rights of the Windham East Association, thereby causing that body to withdraw from the General Association. It continued to 1817 and we have noted churches served by Association pastors 1810-1817.

THE UNITARIAN DEPARTURE

The first major schism in the Congregational family was the division which led to the formation of American Unitarianism in the early 19th Century.

A few congregations voted to become Unitarian. Others merely drifted into Unitarianism, simply refusing to cooperate in the Associations related to the General Associations.

The most bombastic quarrels occurred, however, where parishes split from their churches on the theological issues, usually over the choice of a pastor. In such splits the church would invariably declare for orthodox Trinitarianism (with a minority of the parish) while the parish would become Unitarian (sometimes with a minority of the church). This necessitated that the churches organize new parishes. A few of the Unitarian parishes also organized new churches, though some transferred all church functions to the parish.

Historical continuity of these splitting bodies is confused. Often they would merely divide and two groups would meet and claim to be the continuing organization. Parishes, of course, could go to court to find out the rightful legal heir of a division. But the ecclesiastical heir is harder to come by. Even when a writer of the time has reported what happened to a "majority of the church" we do not know if they mean a majority at several meetings, a majority at one specified meeting (sometimes irregularly called) or the majority of the people on a membership roll but never at a meeting.

This was all further complicated in Massachusetts where a Unitarian judge ruled in the famous Dedham case that the parish was the legal guardian of the church and had title to all of its rights - even its records - no matter what the majority of church members desired (Talk about how history could turn the ideas of the Puritans on their ear!).

Despite the Massachusetts courts, this study is more ecclesiastically biased. Therefore in all cases of church-parish splits we have uniformly shown the church as the continuing Trinitarian body and the parish as the Unitarian body.

In a few cases a church or parish became Universalist in the general ferment of the departure.

(A few cases before the departure when a church and parish divided are merely shown as two churches with different organization dates. The text clarifies the origin.)

As was the question for Congregational churches, there is a question as to what constitutes a Unitarian church. Interestingly some to this day still call themselves congregational.

The division became most clear after 1825 when the American Unitarian Association was organized. It was, however, an organization of people and not churches. It was not until the publication of what was to become the American Unitarian Register in 1846 that we begin to find a reliable list of Unitarian congregations.

Since the last church-parish splits also occurred in the 1840's, we have used the end of that decade, the end of 1850 as the final date for the division into two denominations. All congregations organized up to 1805 and mixed Unitarian-Trinitarian congregations formed 1806 to 1850 are shown on the main lists.

Specifically Unitarian congregations formed 1806 to 1850 are shown in Appendix I.

POST MERGER CHANGES

The Congregational Christian merger occurred in 1931 by the uniting of the National Council of Congregational Churches and the General Convention of the Christian Church as the General Council of Congregational (and) Christian Churches. In reports through the end of 1933, however, all churches were listed specifically as Congregational or Christian.

Beginning in 1934 all newly-listed churches were Congregational Christian. Therefore the historic period in which a church could be organized or accepted as a Congregational church ended at the close of 1933. The master list therefore runs 1620 to 1933. We have, however, included information on what happened to each of these congregations since then.

Congregations originally appearing as Congregational Christian are shown in Appendix II.

Mergers involving former Congregational churches in 1934 or later are shown in the main table under code "M" for merger entry rather than as a numbered entry.

The United Church of Christ was formed in 1957 by the union of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church, but local churches had to vote as to whether or not to join it. This was done by most congregations by voting on the proposed United Church Constitution in 1960 and 1961. When that Constitution was declared in force (July 4, 1961), a list of United Church congregations was issued.

After that the main listings divided into three categories. The first is United Church of Christ. The second group is Schedule I. (called Schedule II in the 1962 Yearbook) which includes churches which have not voted or have voted to abstain from voting as to whether to join the United Church. The third group is Schedule II. (called Schedule III in the 1962 Yearbook) which includes churches which voted not to be a part of the United Church of Christ.

Information on the continuing Congregational Christian groups was published in separate listings begun by them. We have listings for the Conservative Congregational Christian Conference from 1958 and the National Association of Congregational Christian Churches from 1961 when they began to act as a denomination.

Specifically Congregational Christian churches, therefore, appeared 1934 to 1960 and are found in Appendix II.

Churches first appearing as United Church of Christ congregations from 1961 on are shown in Appendix III.

Congregations which first appear as continuing Congregational Christian churches are shown in Appendix IV. They include Conservative Conference churches from 1958 on and National Association churches and churches first appearing as Schedule I and Schedule II churches from 1961 on.

This study does not include congregations of the General Convention of the Christian Church or its forming bodies listed by the end of 1933 which became part of the merged churches. Nor does this study include congregations of the Evangelical and Reformed Church or its forming bodies listed by the end of 1960 which became part of the United Church of Christ.

CHANGES IN THE CALENDAR

Colonial dating is complicated by the fact that the British Empire changed its calendar in 1752.

The calendar skipped from September 3 to September 14, 1752, thus resulting in the famous missing days.

Thus any written or recorded date prior to the missing days is actually ten days later on our modern calendar. Events recorded in a diary for the last week of December 1749 (written using the Old Style calendar) would be reckoned by us as occurring in January 1750 (equivalent celestial position in the New Style calendar).

Therefore all dates in the last 10 days of December in any year before 1752 must be corrected to one year later (or noted as falling under this problem).

While the ten-day move of the calendar was the most significant event of the calendar change to the people of that day, to us the most significant change in dating regards the fact that the date of New Year changed. Under the old calendar the New Year began on March 25, not January 1. Therefore the Old Style calendar never had a January 1 to March 25, 1752. Therefore documents with the old style dates during this beginning portion of the year would appear to be one year earlier to us than they actually are.

Therefore to solve this problem many careful historians have recorded dates with a double designation: O.S./N.S.; Old Style for the actual written recorded date; New Style for the equivalent date for our modern calendar.

Some however, were not so careful.

For the purposes of this study, where a date has been clearly delineated Old Style or New Style we have uniformly printed the New Style date followed by a plus (+) to indicate this is the case. The Old Style recorded date would always be one year earlier.

However, if a specific date is known to fall in the controversial period, but we have no clear guidance as to which is used we have followed the date with a star (*) to indicate the year is in debate.

All other dates before 1753 without a symbol either fall specifically on dates that would not be in debate, or are unspecified guesses or approximations.

THE CHURCH LISTS

The Columns A through E

Each church is located in the town (as currently defined) in which its primary meeting place for worship is or was. This is true even if the modern town was organized after the demise of the church.

Churches which have changed location within a state are located at their last place of worship. Churches which have changed location over state lines are located twice, separately in each state. This, however, does not include mission churches covenanted in one place to be immediately removed to a new location. These are shown only in their new location.

Listings are by state and county. Each State listing begins with the state name followed by its U.S. Census two-digit computer number.

Under each state each existing county is listed in alphabetical order. Each county is followed by the year in which it was locally organized (sometimes later than being set apart by the state.) It is then followed by its three-digit U.S. Census computer number.

Within each county each town is listed in alphabetical order. Within each town each church is listed in alphabetical order by name.

Towns without churches are listed at the end of each county list, with the exception of Maine where such towns are noted only in the index.

The church lists are shown in five columns labeled A to E.

The consecutive church numbers and town names for alphabetical listing are shown in column B.

However, it is column D which provides the research backbone on which the ribs of the churches are attached.

The primary resources for this study during the last century and a half are the church lists published by the general associations, conferences and the national church.

Years listed indicate the years in which a church was published in the church lists. Churches appeared in the listings for their state of location unless a different state or conference name is shown in parentheses. Discrepancies between state and national lists are noted in the text (column B). Churches which belonged to the association or similar body as statedly Presbyterian are shown in brackets. Listings on Unitarian lists are shown in parentheses, but also include all column D entries in Appendix I.

Once a church has been initially listed, periods of not listing indicate the specific church was not listed. When an entire association or conference is not reported, but the church appears in both sides of the missing report, the church is shown as continually listed.

Churches which were never listed in these lists (mostly early or Separatist) are shown as not listed (nl.) in column D.

Incorrect double or triple listings are shown in the text (column B). Most short periods of not being listed are errors, although some longer periods are for cause (services not held, temporary withdrawal, etc.).

During the periods when the dates come from national publications (see bibliography) these should be identical to state lists. Where occasional discrepancies have been discovered they are noted in the text (column B).

Column E indicates the current status of the church or its history after listing ended. United Church of Christ congregations are shown as such. Congregations listed at any time as Schedule I, Schedule II, National Association or Conservative Conference are shown here with the years listed. Information is on the years listed. Corrections regarding actual voting dates are shown in the text (column B).

Churches which became part of the Unitarian departure or transferred to another denomination are shown with their following history.

Extinct congregations are identified. It may be assumed that a church became extinct in the year it was dropped from listings (last figure in column D) unless another date is given here. Dates shown here in parentheses are debates with the last column D date.

Information on dual alignments with other denominations is also included here.

Debates on the later life of congregations are noted here.

Column A indicates any special ecclesiastical definition or ethnic and language group with which a church was identified at some point in its history.

Ecclesiastical groups with abbreviations are as follows:

- AP Associated Presbytery member at some time.
- NE Not established sometime during establishment period but claiming to be congregational (in addition to Strict church)
- OL Old Light church at some time.
- pP possibly Presbyterian at some time, in some sources.
- Pr Presbyterian at some time.
- pS possibly Strict or Separate Congregational at some time.
- Se Strict or Separate Congregational at some time.

Ethnic churches are those where an ethnic group was the clear majority of the congregation's membership.

Language churches are those where the main worship service was held in that language.

Some language churches eventually became English-speaking ethnic. A few English congregations developed into ethnic congregations.

Ethnic and language groups with their abbreviations in New England are:

Ar Armenian
bB became Black (change period noted in text column B)
Bl Black
Ch Chinese
Da Danish
DN Danish-Norwegian mixture
Dt Dutch
Fi Finnish
Fr French
Gk Greek
Gr German
Hu Hungarian
In American Indian (all tribes)
Ir Irish
It Italian
Ko Korean
mI mixed American Indian and English
Nr Norwegian
CV Cape Verdean
Sc mixed Scandinavian
SF Swedish-Finnish mixture
Sp Hispanic (all types)
Sw Swedish
We Welsh

Column C shows the date of the ecclesiastical organization. Where it is known, this is the date of the covenanting of the local church, usually as recognized by council. If that did not happen, the closest parallel to it is given. (Usually the beginning of regular worship as allowed in the Cambridge Platform (IV,4)).

This date is best found in the records of the local church. For this column we have been forced to use secondary sources. The first date given is the best possible date (indicated as directly from the church records, or the most widely used date in the most responsible sources). The first date given is supported by all exhaustive resources unless otherwise reported. Other alternative dates follow. If a more detailed history indicates the origin of these dates (such as parish organized, preaching began, etc.) that information is supplied. If the reason for a conflicting date is not given, we merely indicate its source. Sometimes even parish dates or preaching dates are disputed. In these cases source is also given.

When the date shown is for a specific reason (such as society organized, preaching begun, etc.) a colon (:) before the source indicates that the source indicated says that that date is for the specific special reason shown. When a semicolon (;) separates special information from a source, it indicates that while the date is for the special reason shown, the source mentioned sees that date as the church organization date.

In cases where a church and parish split and the parish became Unitarian or Universalist, we have always assigned the initial dates (including parish dates) next to the Trinitarian church. The dates next to the parish are the dates of the division, although they also uniformly claim the original date.

Reorganization dates are also noted in this column.

Merged churches are so noted. The date here is the date of the merger, although most of these churches use the date of their earlier branch in describing their age.

Column B is the main text for each church.

The first item given is the currently existing town in which the church was located at the start of 1934 or located at the time it died. Location means: primary place of worship of the church. New churches listed since 1934 are shown at their present location.

This is followed by the current legal name of the church (except that since the listing of new Congregational churches ended after 1933, in some cases the name at that time is inserted to make sense of the order of the listings. This is noted if done and not otherwise obvious). Churches which were never incorporated or for whom legal status is obscure are listed by their best known name. The word "church" or the listing of the town of its location are generally eliminated from the printed name unless needed to make sense.

Following in parentheses is this information:

Popular current or historic alternative names for the Church are shown.

Former formal names of the Church are also noted if substantially different than the present name. Minor rearrangements of words are not shown. The most recent name is given first following in reverse chronological order to the most ancient name which is given last. We have uniformly not included changes from Church of Christ to Congregational which was a universal change in early churches. Nor have we included changes from Congregational to Congregational Christian or Congregational Christian to United Church of Christ which would be obvious where a merged name is used. Where a church name was changed because of a name change for the town, the date shown for the change is uniformly that of the date the State changed the town name and may or may not be the date the church started to use the different name. Vermont cities coextensive with former towns are not shown as name changes.

Information on the origin of merged churches is given.

Information on Federations is given.

Post Office addresses and notes and corrections to the listing and post-merger listings are noted here.

Information on branches where known is shown. Branches are of two types. Many congregations conducted regular worship in more than one place. Other branches result from separate worship services being provided for another language group even though that group was not a majority of the congregation. Often it was the recommended mission board policy that language groups not become independent churches so that as language use declines more members could be integrated into the English membership. Language branches could be in the same or other locations. Branches involving other places of worship were extensive. The U.S. Census of Religious Bodies in 1890, for instance, claimed that there were 1,525 Congregational churches in New England then, but that they had 1,808 buildings! We, however, have not really begun to scratch the surface of the widespread phenomena of branches.

Information on Separatist splits and groups, Presbyterian judicatories, confusing treatments in various references, exclusion by exhaustive references, and any confusing factor in the church's history are discussed here.

An underlined place, parish or post office name indicates the church at some point appeared in the listings alphabetically under that name.

Churches within each county are numbered consecutively.

Churches which split in a Unitarian or Universalist departure are shown as one number. Part "a" represents the church and "b" the parish.

Merged churches formed 1934 or later are shown under their current town or older partner under the designation "M."

Any church can be identified by a ten-digit code as follows: Listing (one digit - zero or appendix numeral); State (two digits); County (three digits); and church (four digits - three for the consecutive number and one for a,b, or M). Churches with two or more mergers under the number (shown as M1, M2, etc. in the text) can be identified as c, d, etc. here for the complete coding.

In all columns, numbers shown with the symbol # refer to the one-, two-, or three-digit numbers of churches in the county being discussed (if not otherwise noted). All unexplained two-digit numbers are bibliographic references (see annotated bibliography).

Note: There is a confusion in Nantucket as to the number of Indian churches, distinguishing them from assemblies, praying towns, etc.. By 1694 there were in addition to the above a Baptist church and two assemblies. Some sources treat some of the assemblies as churches. The four locations of Indian work in addition to Occawan are (including # 3, the Baptist Church and the other two assemblies): Miacomet; Polpis; East end of the Island (or Squatesit) and Wannasquid. See discussion in 12,28,57.

Annual Statistical Lists

- (01) This single reference number refers to the continuous annual statistics and lists of the churches. In the later years we have used the national publications for the listings which should be uniform with the state lists. In earlier years we have used the state reports. At first the national lists were merely reprinted copies of the General Association bodies. Beginning in the 1855 Yearbook these were changed to geographic lists for each state. The practice of printing churches by Conference membership was returned to in the 1928 Yearbook.

National Publications:The Congregational Almanac for 1846-1848

(3 volumes) (C.C. Dean (1846 volume), James French (1847 & 1848 vols.), Boston, 1845-1847)

These three volumes have reproduced a variety of the state reports without consistency. We have taken only the Rhode Island information from the first two of these issues with statistics for c.1844 to c.1845.

American Congregational Yearbook 1854-1859

(6 volumes) (American Congregational Union, New York, 1854-1859)

[first issue called Yearbook of the American Congregational Union]

We have used these lists and statistics for the years c.1852-c.1857. It was during these years we have the largest discrepancies between the national and state lists.

Congregational Quarterly 1859-1878

(20 volumes) (American Congregational Association and American Congregational Union, Boston and New York, 1859-1878)

This magazine beginning in 1860 devoted one issue per year to the publication of statistics which we have used to cover the years c.1858-c.1876, nineteen years of statistics. The Quarterly from the start also printed information on new churches organized or received beginning with 1858. (Code ncl.01.)

Congregational Yearbook 1879-1928

(51 volumes) (National Council of Congregational Churches, New York & Boston, 1879-1929)

We have followed these listings. The user of this set should be aware of two problems in dating these volumes. The 1888 Yearbook was the first to make statistics uniform for the calendar year before the date of publication. (That volume printed the Jan. 1 to Dec. 31, 1887 statistics.) The earlier volumes printed variously dated reports covering c.1877-c.1885. One set of the New England statistics (for c.1886) was published by the local state bodies, but not nationally. We have taken that one year from the various state minutes. The other problem involves the dating of the volumes. Volumes 1 to 24 bore the date of the year of their publication (1879 to 1902). Volumes 25 to 36 bore two dates, the year of publication and the year the enclosed statistics covered (1903 to 1914, statistics for 1902-1913). Volumes 37 to 51 bore the date of the statistics covered (statistics for 1914 to 1928). Thus, depending on the method followed, many libraries have two 1902 volumes, two 1914 volumes, or have erroneously discarded one issue. These volumes have statistics for c.1877-c.1885, 1887-1928. The Quarterly practice of separate lists of new churches organized or received was followed through the 1896 Yearbook. ( Code ncl.01.)

Yearbook of the Congregational (and) Christian Churches 1929-1960

(32 volumes) (General Council of the Congregational (and) Christian Churches, New York & Dayton, Ohio, 1930-1961)

We have followed these lists with statistics for 1929-1960.

Yearbook of the United Church of Christ 1962-1988

(27 volumes) (United Church of Christ, New York, 1962-1988)

We have followed these lists with statistics for 1961-1987.

State Publications:

We have used the state publications for the lists from the year they were first published in each state through the 1852 meeting (which published lists for c.1851) and also for the 1887 meeting (which published lists for c.1886). In each case here we have only given the earliest title and dates for the minutes which we could find. They have continued annual publication to now and under various titles and serve the various state conferences of the United Church of Christ. The exception to this rule is Rhode Island where statistics for the years c.1844-c.1845 came from the Congregational Almanac issues for 1846 & 1847. Places of publication are not shown as these varied widely.

Minutes (Acts and Proceedings) of the General Association of Connecticut; organized in 1709, we have found minutes for 1738-on (although there were apparently a few years of no meeting); a statistics plan was proposed here in 1791, another statistics keeping plan was announced in 1813. Association summaries appeared 1813 but no church lists appear until the 1820 minutes, and statistics are shown first in the 1832 minutes. Lists cover c.1819-on. Statistics were passed from the Association to Conference minutes in 1868. There were technically two bodies from that date.

Minutes of the Evangelical Consociation of Rhode Island; organized in 1809, we have only located minutes of this body for 1823,1826,1833-1834,1836-1841, 1843,1845-1848,1852-on; plans were announced for a statistical collection in 1833, but were not published with the minutes until 1847-on, (for c.1846-on). In some earlier years, since churches belonged directly to this body, we are able to uncover the names of churches attending meetings. We have therefore shown lists of churches affiliated to this body on the basis of membership attendance from the 1833 meeting (for c.1832)-on.

Minutes of the General Association of Congregational and Presbyterian Churches of New Hampshire; organized in 1809, this body's minutes are extant from organization. Summaries of statistics began to appear in the 1816 minutes (for c.1815), but no church lists appeared until they were published with statistics in the 1819 minutes (for c.1818-on).

Minutes of the General Association of Massachusetts (Proper); organized in 1803, we have found minutes of this group from 1807-on. A statistics plan was proposed in 1808. The first lists with statistics appear in the 1826 minutes (for c.1825-on). There were two bodies 1860-1868.

Minutes of the General Conference of Maine; organized in 1826, all of the minutes of this group are extant, including those of an organizational planning meeting of 1824; church lists with statistics appear in the 1828 minutes (for c.1827), 1830 minutes (for c.1829) and 1832 minutes on (for c.1831-on).

Conference statistical summaries appear without complete lists in the 1827, 1829, and 1831 minutes (for c.1828,c.1829, and c.1830).

Minutes of the General Convention of Ministers (Congregational and Presbyterian) of the State of Vermont; organized in 1796, all of the minutes of this group are extant including a 1795 preliminary meeting. The first church lists appear in the 1820 minutes (for c.1819-on) and statistics are added in the 1828 minutes.

Once church lists have been shown as a part of the general association, reports are continuous except as follows. These Associations were not shown with church lists in the minutes indicated:

Maine: Aroostook (1843,1844, & 1845 minutes); Somerset (1828); Washington (1828, 1844).
 Massachusetts: Barnstable (1830,1832,1834,1836); Brewster (1837,1841); Essex Middle (1826,1827,1831); Essex North (1835,1845); Hampden (1827,1835); Hampshire Central (1826); Haverhill (1827,1830,1831,1833,1834); Middlesex Union (1827); Mountain (1826,1833); Old Colony (1826,1827); Pilgrim (1840, 1841); Salem and Vicinity (1826,1834); Suffolk South (1835); Woburn (1836); Worcester Central (1828,1830,1834); Worcester North (1828);
 New Hampshire: Deerfield (1826); Orange (1840,1841,1842,1843,1844); Union (1826)
 Rhode Island Consociation (1835,1842,1844,1849,1850,1851)
 Vermont: Caledonia (1828); Lancaster (1836,1843,1844,1845); Orange (1839); Orleans (1828,1837); Pawlet (1828,1833)

CC Churches which by their action reported as of June 15, 1961 will be counted as part of the UCC (Report of the Co-Secretaries of the United Church of Christ) (mimeo, 1961). This was the first list of United Church congregations.

File of Votes of Congregational Christian Churches on the formation of the United Church of Christ 1960 ff. This file at the office of the Secretary of the United Church of Christ in New York was used to find exact dates of congregations votes for the United Church of Christ, Schedule II etc..

These entries taken as a whole, are the primary source material on which these studies are based. Unless otherwise specified, all references on listing, not listing, listed twice etc. refer to these publications.

Statistics and reports are on a calendar year basis in Connecticut for 1831, Massachusetts for 1826, and Rhode Island by 1858 or earlier. New Hampshire first adopted calendar year dating in its report for 1876; Vermont adopted calendar year dating in its report for 1877; Maine adopted calendar year dating in its report for 1887. After calendar year dating is adopted, the years shown in Column D are the actual year of listing or dropping of the entry. Before that minutes reflected a period between meetings of the general body including part of the meeting year and part of the previous year. Before the adoption of calendar year dating all listing and dropping dates mean to imply in this year or one year later.

The first date in the listing column indicates that the church first appeared in the report issued for the end of that year. The year shown as the year dropped means this is the first year end report in which the church does not appear. (The last appearance was actually in the report for one year earlier). The number of reports a church appeared in could be easily computed by subtracting the first year from the second. Thus a church listed 1918 to 1920 appeared in two statistical reports, those for the ends of 1918 and 1919.

Other Listings:

Early Unitarian listings come from:

- (02) Unitarian Congregational Register for 1846-1851
 (6 volumes) (Crosly and Nichols, Boston, 1846-1851) [The first two issues were published as Unitarian Annual Register]
 Statistics are for c.1845-c.1850. We have dropped all regular Unitarian listings in 1851, although they continue thereafter.

Modern Unitarian information comes from:

- (03) Unitarian Universalist Association Directory
 (Unitarian Universalist Association, Boston) [We have used the issues of 1965, 1966, 1968, and 1981/82, 4 volumes published 1965, 1966, 1968, and 1982 with statistics for c.1964, c.1965, c.1967, and c.1981.]
- (04) National Association of Congregational Christian Churches, organized 1955 began to act as a denomination 1961. Its records are compiled jointly from these publications:
Member Churches of the National Association 9/15/61 (mimeo) This earliest list of National Association Churches is the first printed after they began to function as a denomination, and is used to indicate churches listed "by 1961."
Handbook (National Association of Congregational Christian Churches, Milwaukee) (9 volumes published as January 1962; 1963; 1964; 1965/66; 1966/67; 1967/68; 1968/69; 1970; 1971/72; published on an irregular basis (1962-1971)) These lists cover approximately one year each. Changes in listings between the 1964 and 1965/66 Handbooks are shown as 1964 or 1965. Changes between the 1968/69 and 1970 Handbooks are shown as 1968 or 1969. Dates are always approximate because of publication irregularity. The last issue (1971/72) included statistics for the calendar year 1970 although changes on the church list run to part of 1971. Therefore the list information may be in the year shown or the year thereafter.
Yearbook (National Association of Congregational Christian Churches, Milwaukee or Oak Creek, Wis.) (17 volumes published as 1972/73 to 1984/85 and 1986 to 1989; published 1972-1988) Statistics for 1971 to 1987 although listings may be in the year following the statistical year.

- (05) The Conservative Congregational Christian Conference was organized in 1948. We have found no publications before the 1959 minutes. However, later issues of listings gave dates churches joined the Conference and we have inserted these where needed. Listings are compiled from the following publications:
Minutes of the Eleventh Annual Meeting of the Conservative Congregational Christian Conference (n.p. 1959). Statistics for c.1958.
Annual Report 1966-67, The Conservative Congregational Christian Conference (mimeo) Church lists here are inserted to the listing continuity for c.1965.
Year Book (of the) Conservative Congregational Christian Conference (1960-1961; 1963-1966; 1968; 1970-1988) (26 volumes, various places, published 1961-1966, 1968, 1970-1988). Statistics for c.1959-c.1964, c.1966, c.1968, 1970-1987. In the continuity of these volumes the 1970 issue notes changes for 1967 or 1968. The 1971 was the first issue with calendar year reports and notes changes 1969 or 1970.

- (06) Evangelical Covenant Church lists are from Covenant Yearbook ((Swedish) Evangelical (Mission) Covenant Church, Chicago 1896-1986) It had full member chs. in N.E. from 1921. Also included here are chs. in the Eastern Missionary Association (org. 1890, records from 1911) which became a region of this church in 1925. Churches only in the region and not the EC are marked Rgn.

General New England Surveys:

- (10) Stiles, Ezra; A Discourse on the Christian Union, etc., (Eder and Gill, Boston, 1761) [Reprinted as "New England in 1760" American Quarterly Register VII #1, August 1834 pp.21-26]

Here is the first real attempt to list the New England churches. Stiles tried to compile an exhaustive list of churches alive when he wrote. He is most complete except leaving some gaps in Indian and Separatist Churches and in New Hampshire. The 1834 reprint made many errors in reprinting so we have used the original.

- (11) American Quarterly Register (18 volumes; Perkins and Marionette, Boston (and Andover) 1827-1846)

Shortly after the beginning of the publication of the annual church lists the American Education Society began to publish reviews of churches up to then. One of the main goals of the series was to publish lists of the New England clergy. Therefore, sometimes more data on clergy than the churches themselves is given. The various state and county sections were written by different editors and so vary in fulness of information given. Before the series was finished, all of New England except six Vermont counties was included. Summary histories of the state bodies were also printed. This magazine was published under five different titles over 20 years, but all of its treatments of concern to us were while it used the American Quarterly Register title. The lists are meant to be exhaustive of both living and extinct churches. However, it is weak in reporting Separated and Indian churches. These studies are the foundation of much of the later studies.

- (12) Davis, Emerson; Biographical Sketches of the Congregational Pastors of New England (6 volumes, typescript, n.d.) at Congregational Library, Boston; This is meant to be an exhaustive list of living and extinct churches running to about the Civil War. It is based primarily on the American Quarterly Register and usually repeats their omissions of Indian and Separatist churches.
- (13) Weis, Frederick Lewis; The Colonial Clergy and the Colonial Churches of New England (The Society for the Descendents of the Colonial Clergy, Lancaster, Ma. 1936) [Reprinted by the Genealogical Publishing Co., Baltimore, 1977]. This is an exhaustive study of churches organized before 1776, living and extinct. We have used the reprinted edition. Also somewhat weak on Indian and Separate churches, Weis is often drawn to give parish rather than church organization dates.
- (14) Weis, Frederick Lewis; List of the Unitarian Churches and Their Ministers in the United States and Canada (Meadville Theological Seminary, typescript, n.d. (c.1960)) This is an exhaustive list of all churches which became or were Unitarian. Very thorough, it interestingly includes a few churches extinct before the Unitarian departure. Weis lists splits of church and parish as Unitarian churches. He also prefers parish dates to church dates. A copy is at the Congregational Library in Boston.
- (15) Oberholzer, Emil Jr.; Delinquent Saints (Columbia University, New York, 1956) A table in this book indicates the local records of several churches which provides some dating. However, it is not exhaustive and has some very obvious and bad errors.
- (16) Nordbeck, Elizabeth C.; The New England Diaspora; A Study of the religious culture of Maine and New Hampshire 1613-1763 (Harvard University Ph.D. Thesis 1978) The references in this study indicate the local records of several churches thereby providing some dates in the states and periods covered. It is not exhaustive.
- (17) Kirkham, E.Kay; A Survey of American Church Records IV Edition (Everton Publishers, Logan, Utah, 1978) This is a non-exhaustive listing of local church records which provide several dating parameters. It is an extensive list but not exhaustive. Kirkham often confuses parish and church records and often does not properly understand name changes in local churches.
- (18) Goddard, Carolyn E.; On the Trail of the UCC (United Church Press, New York, 1981) This non-exhaustive book includes several brief comments on the histories of many New England churches.

State Surveys:

- (20) Contributions to the Ecclesiastical History of Connecticut (General Association of Connecticut, William A. Kinsley, New Haven 1861) [Reprinted by the Connecticut Conference of the United Church of Christ, Hartford, 1973] This is an exhaustive treatment of living and extinct congregations and is the basic text on this state. Separatist churches are not treated in the main text but are covered in a separate article. We have used the reprint edition.
- (21) List of Congregational Ecclesiastical Societies Established in Connecticut before October 1818 with their changes (Connecticut Historical Society, Hartford, 1913) This is an exhaustive study of all established parishes, and therefore of established churches in the state.
- (22) Contributions to the Ecclesiastical History of Connecticut Volume II (Connecticut Conference of the United Church of Christ, Hartford, 1967) This is an exhaustive study of churches alive anytime between the publication of Volume I (1861) and this book. A few short lived churches are missing.
- (23) Greenleaf, Jonathan; Sketches of the Ecclesiastical History of the State of Maine (Harrison Gray, Portsmouth, N.H., 1821) This is the first study of the Maine churches and was meant to be exhaustive of living and extinct churches.
- (24) Duren, E.F.; "Churches and Ministers from 1672 to 1867" in Minutes of the General Conference of Congregational Churches of Maine in 1867 [added to in the Minutes of 1876 and 1886] This is an exhaustive treatment of churches living and extinct. There are some discrepancies amongst the original work and the later two editions.
- (25) Clark, Calvin Montague; History of the Congregational Churches of Maine Volume I (Southworth Press, Portland, 1926), Volume II (Congregational Conference of Maine, Portland, 1935) The second part of this study is a thorough exhaustive list of all churches organized between 1600 and 1826.
- (26) Clark, Joseph S.; A Historical Sketch of the Congregational Churches in Massachusetts (Congregational Board of Publication, Boston, 1858) This is an exhaustive study of churches living and extinct. It is limited in its treatment of Indian and Separatist churches.
- (27) Swan, Robert T.; Tenth Report on the Custody and Condition of the Public Records of the Parishes Towns and Counties (Commonwealth of Massachusetts Public Document # 52, Boston, 1898) [Revised in Fifteenth Report, 1903] This is an exhaustive study of living and extinct bodies. It tends to relate to parish dates more than churches and misses most Indian churches and several short lived congregations. We have used the earlier report.
- (28) Worthley, Harold Field; An Inventory of the Records of the Particular (Congregational) Churches of Massachusetts gathered 1620-1805 (Harvard University Press, Cambridge, 1970) [Harvard Theological Studies, Volume XXV; Proceedings of the Unitarian Historical Society, Volume XVI, Parts 1 and 2] An authoratative and exhaustive study of all churches organized before 1806. It used the church records directly, but where they are missing tends to follow Weis or Swan. It has the finest treatment of Indian churches.
- (29) Farmer, John; Ecclesiastical Register of New Hampshire (Hill and Moore, Concord, N.H., 1821) This exhaustive study of living and extinct churches was

- (29)(continued) the first attempt at covering the churches of the state. The same author later corrected and expanded this for the American Quarterly Register.
- (30) Lawrence, Robert F.; The New Hampshire Churches (Claremont Manufacturing Co., Claremont, N.H., 1856) This is an exhaustive study of living and extinct churches with much detail.
- (31) Hazen, Henry A.; Congregational and Presbyterian Ministry and Churches of New Hampshire (Alfred Mudge and Sons, Boston, 1875) [Reprinted in Congregational Quarterly Volume XVII (new series VII) #4, Oct. 1875 pp.545-574; and Volume XVIII (new series VIII) #2, Apr. 1876 pp.283-314, #4, Oct. 1876 pp.592-600; Rereleased in Bristol, N.H., 1878] Part I. is Towns, Churches, and Pastors; Part II is alphabetical Catalogue of Ministers. This is an exhaustive list of living and dead churches which follows the American Quarterly Register listings.
- (32) Gerould, Samuel L.; The Congregational and Presbyterian Churches and Ministers of New Hampshire, etc. (H.E.White and Co., Lebanon, N.H., 1900) This is an exhaustive study of living and extinct churches and follows the Hazen format although offering some changed information.
- (33) Brockway, Walter P.; The New Hampshire Congregational, Congregational Christian, and United Church of Christ Churches and Ministers 1900-1985(typescript, Brentwood, N.H., 1986) Continues Hazen and Gerould lists. Also correspondence with author 3/29/1980.
- (34) Wild, Azel W.; Early History of Congregationalism in Vermont 1762-1830, unpublished manuscript with a small printed prospectus of 1899 with index by Florence K. Babcock; at the Congregational Library in Boston; An exhaustive study of all churches living and extinct organized by 1830. This closes many of the gaps in the American Quarterly Register articles.
- (35) Comstock, John M.; Congregational Churches of Vermont and their ministry 1762-1942 Historical and Statistical (Cowles Press, St.Johnsbury, 1942) [An extension of an edition for 1762-1914 published by the Caledonian Co., St. Johnsbury, 1915] An exhaustive study of all churches living and extinct. We have used the later edition.

Work Projects Administration Studies:

These studies of local church records are of three types. The most valuable are the inventories which include historical outlines of each of the churches discussed. Of significant value are the guides which indicate organization dates. Both the guides and inventories treat extinct churches. Of least value are the directories which merely list congregations alive at the time of publication.

- (43) Guide to Church Vital Statistics Records in New Hampshire (Preliminary Edition) (New Hampshire Historical Records Survey, Manchester, N.H., 1942) Only a portion

- (43)(continued) of the churches are treated. The rest of the churches are merely listed.
- (44) Guide to the Church Vital Statistics Records in the State of Rhode Island (Historical Records Survey, Providence, 1942) An exhaustive study of living and extinct churches.
- (45) Guide to Vital Statistics in the Church Records of Connecticut (Connecticut Historical Records Survey, New Haven, 1942) Designed as an exhaustive study of living and extinct churches it reports that Congregational work was only 85% complete. (p.ii)
- (46) Inventory of the Church Archives of Connecticut - Presbyterian (Connecticut Historic Records Survey) not published, but deposited at the Connecticut State Library, Hartford, 1940, reproduced for the Presbyterian Historical Society, Philadelphia, 1964. An exhaustive study of living and dead Presbyterian churches.
- (47) Inventory of the Church Archives of Vermont, Preprint of Churches of Hinesburg 1789-1939 (Historical Records Survey, Montpelier, 1939) A treatment of only one town.
- (48) An Inventory of the Universalist Archives in Massachusetts (Historical Records Survey, Boston, 1942) An exhaustive study of Universalist churches living and extinct.

Because calendar year dating for the Presbyterian Church did not begin until the 1948 General Assembly minutes, we have adjusted all of Hall's listing dates prior to that change to one year before the minute dates so that his use will conform to our use. ## HOW TO USE THESE INDEXES:

STEPS TO FIND A CHURCH

1. Churches are listed in the town of their primary place of meeting. Towns are listed by state and county. To discover the county of a particular town look in Index A for the appropriate state.
2. If what seems to be the town name does not appear in index A, then it may be an extinct place, or a parish, village or other name never incorporated as a town. Consult both indexes B and C to find which existing town you need to refer to in Index A.
3. If a specific church does not appear under the list of churches for its town then check Index D for other towns in which the church may be found as a cross reference.

BE AWARE: Some names have been used for living towns, extinct places, parishes, and villages. Be sure to check under all possible uses. Villages or parishes in a town which merely use the main name of the town plus a geographic designation (such as North, East, Central etc.) are not separately indexed under such designations.

INDEX DEFINITIONS:

There are separate indexes for each of the New England states. An additional index for a few unlocated places follows Vermont. Each State Index is divided into four parts as follows:

PART A: Lists all the cities, towns, gores, grants, etc. currently existing in the state and indicates the county in which the local jurisdiction is located.

PART B: Lists places which were formerly organized but no longer exist under that name. This is not an exhaustive list of such places, but includes primarily only those which contained churches while operating under such names, or whose names persisted in later churches' identities. This list directs the user to the town or city in which the location currently is.

PART C: Lists all village and parish names which were not formal primary subdivisions of the state. It directs the user to the current location of the church sites which used or use these parish or village names. A few boroughs or incorporated villages which fall entirely within a city or town are included in this list. This is not an exhaustive list but merely includes those used by churches. Where a village or parish name is substantially the same as the town in which it is located (e.g.: Amherst Center or North Amherst in the Town of Amherst) it is not separately listed. Towns which assumed a former parish name are not separately listed under the parish name.

PART D: Provides a cross reference for towns whose names are or were used by congregations not now listed in those towns. These references are divided into five types:

- 1 - Church was incorrectly listed in some source.
- 2 - Church had a joint name including two communities, served a village which was in two communities, was served by a post office in another community, or had branches in more than one community.
- 3 - Church moved from one community into another or merged across town lines.
- 4 - Town lines were changed.
- 5 - Several present communities were set up from the original community which was much larger. (Where no number is shown in a cross reference table it may be assumed that it is a type 5 cross reference.)

SPECIAL CASES:

In Connecticut Index C has been divided. Index C1 includes formal organized parishes (other than those which became towns with the same name) listed in reference 21 (1913). Index C2 includes all other type C entries.

Because of the large number of communities in Maine, some communities are listed only in Index A and not on the county sheets. * indicates a town which never had churches. With an additional (m.) though, the town is cited in a note or cross reference. + indicates a town which only has churches in the appendices. With an additional (m.) though, it is also mentioned in a note or cross reference. Index A is divided. Index A2 includes all townships with number designations (township and range) and they are merely indicated in total numbers. Index A1 includes all other entries.

Seven Massachusetts cities were incorporated into neighboring cities. Because of the long term history of these communities, their churches are clustered together under the current city. In addition four Massachusetts towns were wiped out by the building of the Quabbin Reservoir. Although the land of these towns was assigned to existing towns, many of the church sites are broken up and under water. The churches of these four towns, therefore, have been kept under their original names. These eleven extinct places form Massachusetts Index B1. All other extinct places are found in Index B2. In Massachusetts cross reference Index D, all communities on extinct Index B1 have been treated as if still alive.
